Pitch Made for $14M Indoor Sports Facility

By Rick Pezzullo

Plans for a $14 million, state-of-the-art, indoor sports facility in the hamlet of Verplanck were outlined to town officials and residents last week.

The so-called “Cortlandt Pitch” project is designed to be a two-story, 58,000 square feet facility on about nine acres of a 99-acre parcel that the town purchased from Con Edison. NY Indoor Sports, Inc., headed by resident Martin Russo, was once planned to be built near Cortlandt Lanes in Crompond, but was relocated after opposition from neighbors who feared it would generate too much traffic.

Russo, who owns a law firm, explained the idea for an indoor sports venue came from a group of parents about six years ago who became frustrated with the lack of recreational fields for youth sports in the area. “I’m doing this because it became a project of passion,” Russo said. “We can do what we say we are going to do.”

The main feature of the temperature-controlled building with roof solar panels is three equal size turf fields for soccer, lacrosse and other uses. There will also be training opportunities for sports teams and times for residents to utilize for exercise.

A meeting/party room will be included, as will a large balcony for spectators. The project is expected to generate 26 jobs and hundreds of thousands of dollars annually in taxes and lease payments.

“I think there is a benefit to the town and Verplanck for economic development,” Russo said. “We’re not looking to make a gang buster profit.”

Besides the indoor facility, NY Indoor Sports will be spending another $1.5 million to build another outdoors field on the property next to existing Letteri Field. “We have an opportunity for a nice facility that can serve youth sports teams for years to come,” said Cortlandt Councilman Frank Farrell. “We have a chance to make our community better.”

Yorktown Schools Eye Mid-April Return for All Students

By Rick Pezzullo

If everything goes as planned, all students in the Yorktown School District will be allowed back in the classroom by mid-April.

Yorktown Superintendent of Schools Dr. Ron Hattar optimistically talked about the plan of action last week as parents take part in a survey of their preference for instruction last week as parents take part.

“Our goal from the beginning was to get as many students back in the classroom as possible,” Hattar said. “We’re excited to welcome our students back. I think our students need this.”

Currently, between 40 and 45 percent of high school students are learning fully remotely. In the middle school, 25 percent of students have chosen to remain at home. Moving forward, Hattar said the hybrid model of partial remote and partial in-person instruction will no longer be an option.

“We will keep everyone that comes in our buildings safe,” Hattar stressed. “There are many moving parts to the reopening. It seems like a very overwhelming task. We want to be very careful and strategic with the reopening. We’re cautiously optimistic.”

While Hattar conceded students returning to the classroom will not be six feet apart, he said each desk will have a protective Plexiglass and masks will be required at all times. The Plexiglass barriers are slated to be installed the week of March 22.

Hattar said kindergarten students are set to return on March 23. By April 12, all students in first through fourth grades will be eligible. By April 19, students in fifth through 12th grade will have the green light.

“It’s not the timeline that we hoped,” Hattar said. “In order for us to be successful we have to work together on this. This is bigger than our schools. This is a community effort.”

Word Detectives on the Case

First graders in Marilyne Strang’s class at Frank G. Lindsey Elementary School in the Hendrick Hudson School District have become “word detectives,” ready to solve any challenge they may encounter while reading. That includes knowing how to spot sneaky words, like “in” hiding inside the word “winter.” A real life detective, class parent William Mauro, who works in Westchester County’s Investigations Unit, joined the class and took part in the fun.

Ex-Foreman in Alleged Illegal Dumping Scheme Sought Return

By Rick Pezzullo

A former longtime Town of Cortlandt employee being investigated by federal and county authorities for an alleged scheme involving illegal dumping on town property recently attempted to withdraw his resignation, but to no avail.

Robert Dyckman, who was employed for 28 years before submitting a letter of resignation on January 12, 2021 that was accepted by the Town Board, sent another letter on January 20 to Cortlandt Supervisor Linda Puglisi, stating he was “not with full faculties at the time I made this resignation and was pressured to resign without sufficient time to fully consider the ramifications.”

The resignation was effective as of October 22, 2021—about two months after town officials discovered suspicious activity had taken place on land behind the town’s salt dome at the end of Arlo Lane.

According to Town Attorney Thomas Wood, who was also sent Dyckman’s January 30 withdrawal letter that was obtained by Examiner Media, another employee was sitting through an abundance of material that had been unloaded on the site at the end of August in 2019.

Surveillance video allegedly showed trucks from Griffin’s Landscaping Corporation in Peekskill, and other unmarked vehicles, entering the property and dumping building and other material.

The video footage, according to Wood, also allegedly showed Dyckman being present when Griffin trucks were there. Wood said Dyckman would sometimes leave the gate to the site unlocked or arrive on weekends with his own vehicle to oversee the illegal activity.

Wood said town officials later discovered improperly billed invoices totaling more than $100,000 for repairs to approximately 100 catch basins throughout town that were submitted by Griffin’s and signed off by Dyckman. Most of the repairs, according to Wood, were not done.

“The only way this worked is because there was someone on the inside,” Wood said in a January 26 exclusive article that appeared in The Northern Westchester Examiner. “There was someone in management.”

Town officials contacted the District Attorney’s Office, which then brought in the FBI. Dyckman was then suspended without pay. The Employee’s Union, AFSCME Council 66 Local 2343, filed a grievance with the town requesting that Dyckman be reinstated with back pay. In his resignation letter, Dyckman waived and renounced any claim to retiree health care benefits that he may have been eligible to receive.

In his January 30 letter, Dyckman claimed the newspaper article “wrongly portrayed me as guilty of wrong-doing and violated my privacy and slandered me.”

He also said Wood and Councilman Dr. Richard Becker, who was quoted in the January 26 article and is running to replace the retiring Puglisi, “refused to prove allegations that I had nothing to do with.”

“It is apparent that concern I might run for office against this board member (Becker) is a factor in what occurred,” Dyckman stated. “I am requesting that I continue my union grievance so that I am afforded the opportunity to be heard as town officials have publicly declared me guilty of crimes and that is not the case.”

However, Wood said since the Town Board has already accepted his resignation, the case is closed. He also noted the investigation by federal and county officials is moving forward and expects an indictment and formal charges to be filed against Dyckman and Griffin’s Landscaping in the near future.

The town has also filed a lawsuit against Griffin’s seeking what is projected to be as much as $1 million to clean up the site where the materials were dumped.

Yorktown High School Principal Joseph DeGennaro congratulated the students on this prestigious achievement and noted their many contributions to the school community as a whole. “I am always proud of our students’ academic success,” he said. “Grace, David and Lauren represent our school and student body at the highest level. They are talented in the classroom and make so many positive contributions in other areas of our learning community. They are high character young adults who are humble and appreciative of our outstanding faculty.”

Yorktown High School students have been named finalists in the National Merit Scholarship program for the Class of 2021. Yorktown High School seniors David Djonovic, Lauren Kitts, and Grace Tian were among the 15,000 semifinalists nationwide who advanced to the final designation, making them eligible to compete for 7,600 National Merit Scholarship program for the Class of 2021.

Yorktown Town Board Adopts New Zombie Home Law

By Rick Pezzullo

The Yorktown Town Board approved new rules Tuesday for bank-owned properties known as zombie homes.

The new law applies to properties whose owners are in mortgage default. Under the legislation, within 10 days of the date that a bank declares its mortgage on a particular parcel of property to be in default, the bank shall inspect the premises and register the property with the town’s mortgage-in-default registry.

The new fee to register a zombie home is $500. If the fee is not paid, a $100 fine will be assessed for every month that the registration fee goes unpaid.

“All responsible Yorktown homeowners have the right to enjoy neighborhoods that are not blighted by derelict zombie homes in foreclosure limbo,” said Supervisor Matt Stellato. “I believe that the legal process to resolve a mortgage default is slow, but the pace of the legal system is no excuse for homes to sit in disrepair and poor maintenance.”

If the property is occupied, but remains in default, the law requires that a local property manager or bank representative perform monthly inspections to verify compliance with the law.

“Some people think that zombie homes disappeared after the Great Recession, but this problem continues to plague our neighborhoods,” said Councilman Tom Diana. “We are holding banks accountable for their negligence.”

If the property is in default and vacant, the local property manager or bank must perform weekly inspections to verify compliance with the law.

“It is important that banks realize that if they own a house in one of our neighborhoods, they are responsible to be a good neighbor and keep up on the maintenance of the property,” said Councilman Ed Lachtnerman. “Being an institution does not absolve them of that requirement.”

The new zombie home law requires banks or owners of foreclosed properties to: keep the property free of weeds, overgrown brush, trash and circulars; remove graffiti; landscape yards; maintain pools; and secure windows and doors.

“This is an old problem but a good step forward,” said Councilman Vishnu Patel.

Yorktown Students Advance as National Merit Scholarship Finalists

Three Yorktown High School students have been named finalists in the National Merit Scholarship program for the Class of 2021. Yorktown High School seniors David Djonovic, Lauren Kitts, and Grace Tian were among the 15,000 semifinalists nationwide who advanced to the final designation, making them eligible to compete for 7,600 National Merit Scholarships worth more than $31 million.

Tian, the Yorktown High School Class of 2021 Valedictorian, called the designation a “real gem in our town.”

DeGennaro, a member of the Science Research Program and the Varsity Tennis team, said she is undecided on her college choice, but plans to major in biology with hopes of attending medical school.

Djonovic also credits the teachers in Yorktown for helping him achieve his goal. “I couldn’t have achieved this honor without the help of the stellar teachers that I’ve had during my time at Yorktown High School,” he said. “The teachers helped me push myself past my limits and taught me how to be a better thinker.”

He said the most enjoyable experience for him in the high school is the Smart Investments Club. “Learning how to invest is a path to prosperity for anyone,” he explained.

He said the National Merit Finalist recognition is quite an achievement. Djonovic said he was thrilled with the honor and realizes that this designation only opens the door for future gains. “We have to keep in mind that there is a lot more work ahead for all of us to reach our full potential,” he said. He plans to major in political science in an urban-based university.

Pitch for Indoor Sports Facility

“We only have like 100 kids that play soccer. Our kids here are the ones who need it, and they can’t afford it,” said Michelle Piccolo, who said she had four children that played soccer, maintained the project was much more desirable than some of the industrial uses that have been proposed for the site in the past.

“This is a much better option than something industrial, something that’s blowing smoke,” she said. “I have seen first-hand the need for fields. I think it’s great.”
Westchester Asks State to Loosen Quarantine Rules for the Vaccinated

By Martin Wilbur

Westchester County has asked the state to relax quarantine requirements for fully vaccinated residents returning home from out-of-town trips within the United States.

County Executive George Latimer said Monday the request has been made because it’s been a hardship for many residents and has been one impediment to fully reopening schools. The request follows guidance from the Centers for Disease Control, he said.

“We don’t want to wait,” Latimer said. “This is an impact on people’s lives and we want to make it as realistic as possible for people to resume normal functioning in society to help us move forward to get out of this situation.”

For that to happen, vaccine availability will have to increase and people will need to take it. On Monday, the county received its first 1,000 doses of the Johnson & Johnson vaccine. That vaccine is being released for seniors because it is a one-shot dose, therefore, not requiring a second trip.

The Pfizer and Moderna vaccines call for a second shot three and four weeks later, respectively.

For those who are eligible, Latimer urged residents to get signed up for any of the vaccines as soon as they are able to. The Johnson & Johnson vaccine has an 85 percent effective rate, slightly less than the 90-plus percent rates for Pfizer and Moderna.

“Right now, if you’re not vaccinated, you have zero, zero, protection,” Latimer said. “So we think that substantial protection goes a long way in helping people being able to function, even with masks, even with social distancing and hand sanitizing, and the things that we have to do.”

It was a point Gov. Andrew Cuomo tried to drive home during his briefing earlier in the day, particularly relating to the lagging vaccination percentages among the Black and Latino communities. Speaking from the Javits Center in Manhattan, Cuomo said that in New York City, for example, the population is 27 percent Black and 28 percent Hispanic, but those two groups of people account for just 18 and 20 percent of the vaccinations, respectively.

Vaccination rates for white and Asian residents in the city exceed their percentage of the population. Part of the problem is “health care deserts,” Cuomo said, but also a deep distrust of the system. It’s an obstacle that must be overcome.

“We can’t put the needle in your arm if you don’t bring your arm forward,” Cuomo said. “That’s what we’re asking you to do today. This vaccine can save your life. This vaccine can save your mother’s life, your grandmother’s life, your sister’s life, your brother’s life. It literally is a matter of life or death.”

Deputy County Executive Ken Jenkins announced Monday that Westchester will be extending free Paratransit service to seniors and the disabled for transportation to and from a vaccine appointment, even if they are not signed up for the service.

If a county resident has a vaccine appointment, they can call 914-995-7272 ext. 1 for a ride.

So far, the County Center, which opened as a vaccine site on Jan. 13, has administered 91,815 doses through Sunday while the county’s two clinics have provided 17,981 shots. Since all shots through Sunday in Westchester were the two-dose Pfizer or Moderna vaccine, those figures do not represent full vaccinations, only shots given, Latimer said.

Active cases in Westchester fell slightly to 5,930 through Mar. 7, down 46 from the previous Sunday. It represents the lowest active caseload in the county since Nov. 30, and the fifth consecutive week of declines.

Virus-related hospitalizations are also following an encouraging trend, with only 270 as of last Saturday, less than half from a month ago.

Additional COVID-19 fatalities slowed last week with 28 deaths, which pushes the Westchester death toll to 2,125 since the start of the pandemic.

On Monday, Putnam County reported 271 active cases and nine hospitalizations from COVID-19. There have been 86 deaths.

Fans Allowed at School Sports

High school athletes and participants in recreational sports may each have up to two spectators at their games provided that social distancing can be maintained and the venue’s capacity does not exceed 50 percent.

Latimer announced the guidelines last Thursday set by the county Health Department based on guidance from the state. Individual schools and recreational facilities may still choose to have stricter guidelines.

He said the guidelines, which took effect on Monday, allow an athlete’s parents or other family members to attend their game, something that was never in question previously but could be considered a luxury as society struggles to return to normal.

The guideline would apply to both the home and visiting teams, Latimer said.

“We understand that parents want to see their children play sports, this is a huge part of our culture and parents should be involved in their children’s lives,” said County Health Commissioner Dr. Sherlita Amler. “As long as social distancing is observed, and masks are worn, we can accomplish both goals – safety and involvement.”
Westchester Pauses to Remember Victims of Pandemic a Year Later

By Martin Wilbur

Westchester paused last Wednesday to remember the more than 2,000 lives lost in the county from COVID-19 and the struggles it and the nation have faced while fighting the pandemic. The day marked a year to the day that New Rochelle became the state’s first coronavirus hotspot and the focus of an increasingly nervous country when about 100 cases of the coronavirus were linked to a gathering at Temple Young Israel a week or two earlier.

Since then, 2,122 Westchester residents have died from the virus as of Mar. 7, or two earlier.

March 9 - March 15, 2021 Examiner Media

"We're here on a day of commemoration to remember those we have lost and to learn from the experiences we have lived through for the last year," Latimer said. "This pandemic is not yet over and we have more to do with our neighbors has been made worse by being unable to celebrate milestones and holidays together as a community.

"We’re here on a day of commemoration to remember those we have lost and to learn from the experiences we have lived through for the last year," Latimer said. "This pandemic is not yet over and we have more days ahead of us. It’s a proper time to stop and consider the path we’ve taken so far and to find new resolve for the path that’s ahead of us as well."

Clergy from three different faiths, Father Luke Hoyt from Holy Innocents parish and Rabbi Annie Tucker of Temple Israel Center in White Plains and Imam Shaffiq Chace from the Westchester Muslim Center led interfaith prayers. Westchester’s poet laureate, J.K. Fisher, and youth poet laureate Danielle Kohn read appropriate passages from their own work or those of other poets.

Hoyt recalled a funeral he presided over late last March for a man who had died of COVID-19. The only two people allowed at the graveside service were himself and the funeral director, who was livestreaming the service so the man’s loved ones could watch on computers.

There were similar stories from thousands of others. But Hoyt said that while there was the heartbreak of his family and friends unable to say goodbye, he trusted in his God.

"Even in the direst of circumstances that we’ve experienced, even in the direst of circumstances that we may yet experience, we may never be alone," he said.

Deputy County Executive Ken Jenkins said that on Mar. 3, 2020, he knew something was wrong when he received a phone call from Latimer before 8 a.m. That was when he learned of the New Rochelle outbreak.

Jenkins lauded the first responders, health care workers, health officials and essential workers who rushed people to the hospital, cared for the sick and stocked the shelves in food stores. But he asked everyone to keep those who have died in their thoughts.

"We want to remember every soul, every one of the over 2,000 members of our Westchester community, more than a half a million across the country, that these people and individuals, friends and family members, brothers, sisters, mothers, sons, daughters, fathers, friends, forever," said Jenkins. "We want to make sure we recall each and every one of them."

Ben Boykin, chair of the Board of Legislators, said the pandemic has tested everyone’s capacity to come together as a nation, a county and a community. It is a challenge that Westchester has met.

"From somebody helping an elderly neighbor with grocery shopping to volunteers helping to land vaccine appointments to those who are less tech savvy, they have been there helping our neighbors," Boykin said.

The program concluded with a moment of silence at noon. Latimer called on all residents to go to their front doors at 7 p.m. last Wednesday night for a county-wide applause for health care workers who have risked their health and safety to care for others.

Buchanan Incumbents Challenged by Ex-Mayor, Running Mate

By Rick Pezzullo

Two incumbent Village of Buchanan trustees are being challenged in the Mar. 16 election by a former mayor and a third-generation resident.

Duane Jackson, who has been a trustee since 2012, and Cesare Pasquale, a seven-year trustee, are squaring off off the Democratic and Residents lines against Sean Murray and Anthony Capicotti, who have secured the Republican, Conservative and Buchanan United lines.

“I will continue my efforts to offer young families and retirees the quality of life that is the hallmark of our beautiful village,” said Jackson, who is chairman of the village’s New York State Police Reform and Reinvention Committee.

“For the past seven years, I have been able to dedicate and commit to serving as a trustee for the residents of Buchanan,” said Pasquale, a retired New York City police officer who responded to the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. “I am always thinking and working with the rest of the board to make the village the best we can for our residents.”

Murray served as mayor from 2010 to 2014 and was a trustee the two years prior. He is currently chairman of the village’s Planning Board.

“The board has really lost its direction. It’s like they’re going through the motions,” Murray remarked. “The people of this village deserve a voice. Nothing is vetted any more. It’s the board’s job to question what the mayor is doing and let the public speak. They don’t do anything.”

Pasquale, a married father of five, has worked as a Local 137 Operating Engineer for 29 years. He is a board member of Our Lady of Mt. Carmel Society and has followed in the footsteps of his late father and uncle in coordinating the spectacular fireworks display at the annual Italian Feast in Verplanck.

“I think the mayor pretty much runs the show. I think they (trustees) can say more. I don’t know what they have in mind,” Pasquale said. “Nobody knows what’s going on. It’s been a little closed down. I think I can stir it up a little.”

Jackson and Pasquale both responded to Murray’s criticism.

“As a member of the board my job is to have an open mind and listen before coming to any decision,” Jackson said. “I make my decisions based on what I believe is best for our village. At times I stood in disagreement with other members of the board on issues concerning policies and procedures, employment and human resources issues.”

“We work together as a board, regardless of what people think for the best interest of the village,” Pasquale said. “Our process is to have open discussions and respect each other’s opinions. We listen to each other and try to come to a consensus. We have had many heated discussions at workshops, but solutions and compromises are accomplished.”

The village’s largest employer and revenue generator, the Indian Point nuclear power plants, is scheduled to shut down by the end of April. With the closure, Buchanan is set to lose 46 percent, or $4 million, of its annual budget.

Pasquale said the board has responded the best it could under the circumstances after Entergy blindsided local officials in 2017 with the plant’s planned departure.

“We provide the information to our residents as soon as we have it,” he said. “An important proactive thing we did was to write and have our representative pass the legislation on the taxing of the dry casks. We did not take this lying down, and we are the only municipality that have such a law.”

Murray has worked at Indian Point for 29 years and is one of about 300 employees that will remain if Holtec International wins up

New Castle Completes Police Reform Review With Set of Recommendations

By Martin Wilbur

The New Castle Town Board unanimously approved its police reform report last week outlining seven recommendations that are designed to increase trust between the public and the police and improve transparency.

In addition to the suggestions at the town level, the Police Reform and Reinvention Collaborative Committee’s report also highlighted several improvements that could be considered at the county and state levels.

Committee Chairman and Deputy Supervisor Jeremy Saland said that the 19 committee members representing a wide cross-section of the town devised a strong plan and the police department was receptive to new ideas.

“They were very accepting and open and it shows,” Saland said. “We have a very good relationship but we can always do better, we can always look at ways to go in the right process and make sure everyone’s protected and the right response is appropriate.”

The report calls for creation of an independent community advocate, which would eliminate the current system of anonymous public complaints and doesn’t allow for needed follow-up.

A chief’s advisory board will also be established, comprised of various stakeholders to address policing issues. The advisory board would meet semiannually and help ensure police use best practices and form a stronger bond with the community.

A key component of the town’s report suggests a resource line for mental health emergencies. While the committee stated that the police’s goal in that situation is to maintain the health and safety for the person in need, it calls on the county to consider creating a 211 line that would make mental health resources available and have mental health PODS throughout Westchester consisting of personnel who could respond in a crisis.

A 211 line to address those calls was praised by committee member Rev. Dr. Martha Jacobs of the First Congregational Church of Chappaqua.

“I think if there’s a 211 line for people to call, I think that will go a long way, particularly those who have mental health issues, and let their families be able to help them, especially when they’re in a crisis,” Jacobs said.

Other parts of the report called for use of community surveys to track and create goals and determine trends as it relates to residents of color and other marginalized citizens; tracking demographics, including race, age, gender and ethnicity, of traffic stops by town police that do not result in a ticket; expanding the role of the Town Board in its capacity as police commissioners, including holding semiannual meetings with the chief to analyze performance; and posting department policies on the town’s website.

In addition to the suggestion for the 211 mental health line, the committee concluded it supports funding from the state and/or county to pay for body cameras for officers to wear and more education to address issues such as racial and cultural sensitivities, recognizing bias and procedural justice.

Councilwoman Lori Morton said the committee should be proud of its work, coming up with excellent suggestions that will help the department, its residents and the town.

Saland echoed the sentiments and thanked everyone involved.

“It’s really been a team effort,” he said. “Sometimes we sparred, sometimes we agreed, but it’s our product and I’m certainly proud of it and all the people who did their part and make this happen.”
Marianne Steiner

Marianne E. Steiner, who fled Nazi Germany as a girl by enrolling as a student in Belgium and England and went on to live the American dream, died on Feb. 26. She was 101.

Known for her unshakably optimistic attitude, Steiner was born Marianne Esberg in Braunschweig, Germany to a family of successful livestock traders. She often described an idyllic early childhood of family gatherings and fun but in her early teens, as the Nazis’ influence rose, she would recall looking out her window horrified to see Nazis marching in the streets.

By 1933, her parents made the wise decision to send her to a Catholic school that would protect her in Ghent, Belgium. Steiner recalled being only one of two Jewish girls, though she’d never tell anyone she was Jewish. Her father, looking to avert the authorities, stored money in the back of her camera, which she would give to her uncle, Ivan, in Belgium.

In 1937, Steiner would go to England to study at the Reimann School of Art and Design, a Berlin-based private school that moved to England after Nazi persecution. Always with an eye for color and design, she studied window display.

By 1938, the oppression against Jews had become too much to bear for her parents in Germany. Once the police came to confiscate their passports, her father went to the local police to ask how they could retrieve them. By paying up, they were able to get their documents and escape the country. While the family considered immigrating to Sweden, they chose America, stopping in England to pick up Marianne and her late brother, the accountant Andy Esberg, before boarding a ship to New York.

Settling on the Upper West Side of Manhattan, the Esbergs rented out rooms, and one of the renters was a young Austrian Jewish writer named Paul Steiner, whom Marianne immediately said she wanted to marry. As with most things for the rest of her life, she got her way. They had their only son, Tom, and moved to the Westchester suburb of Harrison.

Meanwhile, during World War II, the Third Reich had confiscated Steiner’s father’s property in Wolfenbuettel. In an odd twist, it was sold to Curt Mast, mostly known as the creator of the popular liquor Jagermeister. He was a member of the NSDAP, and he profited highly through the distribution of Jagermeister, called Goering-Schnaps among German soldiers, during the war.

After World War II, Steiner’s uncle, Ivan, initiated a lawsuit against Mast, which was settled in a mutual agreement.

Back in Vienna, Mr. Steiner, who successfully fled Austria in 1939 after one failed attempt, had studied law and had aspirations to be a writer. In the United States, he would turn to publishing, launching Chanticleer Press, which is regarded as the first of the nation’s book packagers, an entirely new business model, as The Times wrote in his obituary.

His biggest success was dreaming up the popular National Audubon Society Field Guide, believed to be the first guide to use photographs of birds rather than drawings. It has sold more than 29 million copies.

Entering Steiner’s home on Fifth Avenue, where she lived since the 1970s, was the near-equivalent of entering a wing of a small museum of antiquities. Steiner would proudly show visitors sculptures from the mid-2000s B.C. that are considered canonical. According to the Los Angeles Times, the Getty Museum spared no effort to acquire the female idols from Steiner, which they did in 1988.

A fierce lover of New York City, Steiner relished every opportunity to soak up the city’s arts, including the Metropolitan Opera, and was independent well into her 90s, living in her Upper Manhattan apartment overlooking Central Park. She read book after book even after her 100th birthday.

Known for her vibrancy, we can only assume her longevity was due to some combination of genetics, staying physically active, keeping her stimulated by books, art and music and regularly quaffing a good, stiff drink.

Active in philanthropy, the organization she supported most was Leo Baeck Institute, a New York- and Berlin-based research library and archive focused on the history of German-speaking Jews.

Steiner is survived by a son, Tom, and his wife Susie; grandchildren Nina Harrison, Nevin and his wife, Katherine, and Keenan; and her great-grandchildren, Abbott and Laurel Steiner.

The Steiner family held a private service on Mar. 1 in her beloved Central Park. In lieu of flowers, the family would love if you donated to the indispensable organization that holds the archives of countless German Jewish families, including ours, The Leo Baeck Institute, at www.lbhi.org/support.
Stewart-Cousins: Cuomo ‘Must Resign’ in Sexual Harassment Scandal

By Martin Wilbur

Gov. Andrew Cuomo’s grip on power may have become much more tenuous on Sunday after state Senate Majority Leader Andrea Stewart-Cousins (D-Yonkers) bluntly urged the embattled governor to resign amid the growing sexual harassment scandal.

Stewart-Cousins ended what had been a largely silent period on the issue with a mid-afternoon statement, which came after most Westchester Democratic state legislators spent last week fending off questions about whether Cuomo’s behavior should lead to his departure from office.

The general consensus had been to let Attorney General Letitia James’ investigation run its course.

But with a direct two-paragraph statement issued on Sunday, the majority leader possibly delivered a devastating blow to Cuomo’s political career despite continued insistence that the scandal is drawing away from the business of governing without daily distraction. For the good health and economic impacts of it. We need to end this process moves ahead expeditiously.”

During a news conference last Wednesday, the governor said he was “embarrassed” by the allegations but that much of his interaction was friendly banter.

“I never treated anyone inappropriately. I never knew at the time I was making anyone feel uncomfortable,” Cuomo said. “And I certainly never meant to offend anyone or hurt anyone or cause anyone any pain.”

On Sunday afternoon, after allegations from Liss and Hinton had been reported from the day before, he insisted that he would not resign.

Before Stewart-Cousins, the only local Democratic state lawmaker to unequivocally call for Cuomo to step down was Assemblyman Tom Abinanti (D-Pleasantville), a frequent critic of the governor over the years.

Last Wednesday, Abinanti tweeted that Cuomo should resign and “spare NY the shame of having a gov. whose actions evidence disrespect for women. He no longer commands the respect necessary to lead, is distracted from giving full attention to the ongoing deadly pandemic & is a distraction to completing a good budget.”

On Saturday, in one of his additional tweets, the assemblyman said “this is not who we want as the face of New York.”

“The Democrats are trying to change the attitude of our communities across the country to be one of respect for all, no matter gender, race, religion, sexual orientation,” Abinanti said. “The governor’s rhetoric matches the goal but his personal conduct does not. He has long been known as a bully. By definition, that’s a lack of respect for other people.”

He said some of his colleagues who may have been hesitant to call for his resignation had likely not wanted to incur Cuomo’s wrath.

In the past, anyone who crossed him often had likely not wanted to incur Cuomo’s wrath. In the past, anyone who crossed him often had likely not wanted to incur Cuomo’s wrath.

In the past, anyone who crossed him often had likely not wanted to incur Cuomo’s wrath.

Last week, state senators Peter Harckham (D-Lewisboro) and Shelley Mayer (D-Yonkers) issued statements in support of the attorney general’s investigation before calling for any action.

“We have called for an independent, thorough and expeditious investigation,” Harckham said. “Then we should decide the disposition.”

Mayer said the allegations are “deeply troubling” but trusts the James’ inquiry.

“I have faith in the Attorney General’s investigation based on the information we currently have,” she said. “I am hopeful the process moves ahead expeditiously.”

Bruce Bellom

Bruce Bellom, of Peekskill passed away on Mar. 1 at Westchester Medical Center with the love of his life, Linda Belger, by his side following a month-long battle with COVID-19. He was 66 years old.

Bruce was born on Apr. 1, 1954, to the late Tony and Lilian Bellom in the Bronx.

A free spirit who lived his life unapologetically, Bruce was a devoted son, father, grandfather, brother, uncle, friend, cop and a source of love, strength, joy, support and understanding, not only to his family but to nearly every person that came into his orbit. The impact of his kindness, encouragement and insurmountable generosity stretched beyond his personal life and into many different communities, groups and organizations.

One of his greatest qualities was making you feel seen, heard and understood.

Whether he was traveling to new destinations with his love, enjoying Yankee games with his children, bowling with his sister and niece, racing his cars at full speed, watching his grandchildren grow up, cheering on his steppers during hockey games, discussing politics or making his daily round of calls to friends and family members, everything Bruce did he did with gusto, swag and fulfillment.

He will be greatly missed by those who had the honor of knowing him.

After Bruce and his brother-in-law, Harold, took the Westchester County civil service exam together in 1979, Bruce went on to become a proud member of the Westchester County Police Department, serving for 34 years and retiring as a sergeant in 2016.

During his tenure, Bruce made an irrefutable impact on his colleagues and mentored dozens of park rangers aspiring to become law enforcement officers for five summers at Playland Park in Rye. His influence has resulted in several rangers moving on to become members of various local and state police departments.

His guidance has also propelled other rangers to reach success outside of law enforcement.

Additionally, Bruce applied his more than three decades of police experience as a member of the Westchester County Traffic Safety Board, where he served for nearly three years. He also trained the armed forces to result in several rangers moving on to become leaders of their families to create an unbreakable bond that will endure years beyond his passing.

Bruce is survived by his two beloved children, Andrew Bellom and Kristen Bellom-Rohrbacher; his grandchildren, Zack, Tyler and Matthew; sister Nancy Young; brother John and Charlie Sibson.

He was predeceased by ex-wife Debbie Collins, and grandfather of T.J. and Caroline.

They had a long career in education, finishing as chairman of the Math Department at White Plains High School. He enjoyed the variety of life in New York, including town concerts, Broadway plays, museums, New York sports teams, a range of restaurants and ocean breezes. He could often be found with his friends at Our Lady of Sorrows Catholic Church and Rooster’s Gedney Way Café. He enjoyed sharing time with his family on visits to Rhode Island, Florida and Bermuda.

Ted’s wife, Teresa (nee Ira), preceded him in death after nearly 50 years of marriage. He is survived by a sister, Joan Giard, or Narraganset, R.I.; daughters Jan Owens of Mount Pleasant, Wisc., Marilyn Woodside of York, Maine and Paula Piekos of White Plains; and many nieces and nephews.

A funeral mass at Our Lady of Sorrows Church in White Plains will be held Mar. 10 at 12:15 p.m. A graveside service will be held at a later date in Rhode Island.

In lieu of flowers, please consider a donation to Our Lady of Sorrows Catholic Church in White Plains or the Veterans Memorial Museum in Woonsneck.

American Heart Association’s Heart Walk a Digital Experience This Year

With COVID-19 still keeping many Americans at home, the American Heart Association (AHA), the leading voluntary health organization focused on heart and brain health for all, remains committed to funding groundbreaking research and helping people live healthier lives through walking together.

The AHA’s Westchester & Putnam Heart Walks are being transformed into a new Heart Walk Experience, providing a way for people to get active, celebrate heart and stroke survivors and raise lifesaving funds.

“Now, more than ever, we’re all looking for ways to connect with others, stay active and stay encouraged,” said Howard Klein, chair of the American Heart Association’s Westchester Board of Directors and Tax Partner at Citrin Cooperman. “Our week-long digital experience allows everyone to continue to have fun and support our lifesaving mission, while spending more time at home. We are grateful for the support from our community and can’t wait to see how everyone makes the Heart Walk their own.”

From Friday, Mar. 26 through Thursday, Apr. 1, Westchester & Putnam Heart Walk participants and teams will not physically meet but are invited to get moving at home or around their neighborhood. Here are a few activities to consider choosing from:

• Take a walk outside (while following current social distancing guidelines).
• Get the whole family involved and have an indoor dance party.
• Try out a few strength-hening exercises like push-ups, lunges and squats.
• Create an at home circuit workout.

“This year, we will walk together as one because so much is at stake,” Klein said. “COVID-19 has only strengthened our resolve because 40 percent of those hospitalized due to COVID-19 are stroke survivors or people with heart disease. With our help the American Heart Association is investing in new research and training front line workers, while they continue the fight against heart disease and stroke.”

Cuomo Has Lost the Moral Authority to Lead New York

That loud thud coming from Albany Sunday afternoon was Senate Majority Leader Andrea Stewart-Cousins’ terse and direct two-paragraph statement telling Gov. Andrew Cuomo that he “must resign.”

One thought had been that if the three-term governor could somehow keep Stewart-Cousins’ and Assembly Speaker Carl Heastie’s support intact, that there was a chance he could survive his rapidly growing scandals that are engulfing his administration.

One of those two pillars fell last weekend.

Of course, Cuomo must go. Now.

Whether he does or not, isn’t irrelevant, but one part of his fate is sealed. Whether it’s tomorrow, next month or at the end of 2022 when his term ends, Cuomo’s political career is over – or should be.

As much as he may try to do his job to the best of his ability in the remaining time in office, Cuomo’s presence will be an ongoing distraction for a state that has more than its share of challenges trying to emerge from the pandemic.

In the fall of 2017, as the Harvey Weinstein sexual abuse scandal mushroomed and the MeToo movement emerged, Democrats across the country embraced a standard of zero tolerance for the type of vile behavior embodied by the predatory movie producer. The standard, by its very definition, was marked by a moral mandate, one that refused to provide preferential treatment to abusive, powerful men.

The past failures by Democrats to hold their own to account, best represented by the contrived and desperate defenses of former President Bill Clinton’s transgressions, would not happen again, the talk at the time insisted.

That is why Stewart-Cousins’ statement, as difficult a decision as it may have been for her, was absolutely essential.

Here in New York, if local Democrats want to maintain the moral high ground, Cuomo must resign.

One of his most vocal local critics, Assemblyman Tom Abinanti, said calling for someone to resign who is accused by multiple victims of sexual harassment is not a knee-jerk reaction to score political points.

“The Democrats are trying to change the attitude of our communities across the country to be one of respect for all, no matter gender, race, religion, sexual orientation,” Abinanti said. “The governor’s rhetoric matches the goal but his personal conduct does not.”

Cuomo has become toxic in nearly every way, and his continued presence as the Democratic leader in New York imperils the party’s entire statewide agenda. He will also make it exceedingly difficult for his party’s next nominee for governor next year.

For those Democrats still sitting on the fence, they must ask themselves how they’d cast the controversy if the governor were a Republican. There’s either zero tolerance for all levels of sexual harassment and misconduct or there’s not.

In a different cultural moment, it might have been considered reasonable to allow for a more formal investigation to proceed before arriving at a conclusion as dramatic as calling for the governor to step aside. But in this morality play, elected Democrats have already adopted a policy that must be evenly applied.

Cuomo has lost his authority, legislatively and morally, to continue to lead the state. He need not look further than his own words when he released his official statement on the Brett Kavanaugh confirmation: “In New York, we will not waver and will not back down,” Cuomo stated in prepared remarks in October 2018. “To Dr. Christine Blasey Ford and all survivors of sexual assault, we believe you and we will fight for you.”

While the unique circumstances of the specific cases are different and should be treated as such, the fact remains that the allegations leveled against Cuomo, in their totality, undoubtedly meet and exceed the standard Democrats set.

Cuomo must resign, and do it today.

Opposing Peekskill Dem Slate Never Participated in Nominating Process

The Peekskill Democratic City Committee (PDCC) is enthusiastic about the diverse and accomplished slate of candidates we have endorsed for mayor and city council this year: Deputy Mayor Vivian McKenzie for mayor, councilmen Ramon Fernandez and Dwight Douglas for re-election and Rob Scott for election to council.

We also feel the need to clear up some disingenuous and misleading statements made by a member of the slate opposing the endorsed Democratic slate in the June primary – statements made both in a recent article (“Scott to Juice Up Peekskill Common Council Election, Joins Democratic Slate”) and at our last meeting.

We’re speaking out because we can’t afford to let “alternative facts” about how elections are run (and whether they’re fair) take hold in Peekskill; we’ve seen all too well what that does to America.

The facts are as follows:

The Democratic committee ran a very public, open and transparent nominating process. Far from being shut out of the process, our opponents instead made a conscious decision not to participate in the process at all.

The Nominating Committee was appointed at the October 2020 public meeting of the Democratic committee and consisted of seven members. The committee advertised in local and regional newspapers, including those aimed at the African American and Latino communities, and posted on social media, inviting any registered Democrat interested in running for local office to submit a letter of interest. The committee then interviewed all persons that responded.

I, as chair of the Peekskill Democratic City Committee, reached out to all council members up for re-election. I spoke with Councilwoman Agudelo twice – to determine whether she was running for re-election. She stated that she was not.

Marina Ciotti-Hodges, chairwoman of the Nominating Committee, also reached out by e-mail and by phone to explain the process and the deadlines for submitting information and scheduling interviews. Councilwoman Agudelo never contacted the Nominating Committee and never stated her interest in running for office.

Instead, she called the night before our January meeting, in which the Nominating Committee was to announce their recommendations for Democratic candidates, to say that she had not only changed her mind, but that she had put together an entirely different slate on which she would be running. The process by which their candidates were selected is a mystery to me. It was certainly not transparent.

Nevertheless, this alternative slate came to the Democratic Committee meeting and had each of their names put into nomination. They lost decisively by a vote of the Committee, 80 percent to 20 percent.

For Councilwoman Agudelo to now say that she and her running mates were not considered, or were somehow left out of the process by the Peekskill Democratic City Committee, is simply not true. They chose not to participate, to form a ticket through some private process, neither disclosed to the Democratic committee or to the public, and then came to the Democratic Committee to have their names put into nomination.

Councilwoman Agudelo and her running mates were then considered, and were decisively rejected.

Westchester’s Leading Women to Be Celebrated in History Program

Since the turn of the last century, a dazzling parade of America’s finest actresses have made their homes in Westchester.

On Sunday, Mar. 21 from 6 to 7 p.m., these leading women will be the subject of a Women’s History Month program presented by Barbara Davis, co-director of the Westchester County Historical Society. The virtual program, to be conducted via zoom, is free.

Beginning with the silent movie stars of the Thanhouser Film Company in New Rochelle (1909-1918) and D.W. Griffith’s studios in Mamaroneck (1919-1924), to blockbuster stars of the 21st century, Davis will trace the various eras of stage, film and television by highlighting the lives of the women who had starring roles – and homes in Westchester.

Geography, aesthetic appeal, good schools, recreational opportunities and peaceful refuge have all been part of the county’s allure. The program is richly illustrated with archival photographs from the historical society’s collection and contemporary images.

Established in 1874, the Westchester County Historical Society is one of the oldest historical societies in America and the only organization that collects and promotes the countywide history of Westchester. The Society’s comprehensive and accessible collection of books, pamphlets, periodicals, newspapers, manuscripts, maps and atlases, and images pertaining to the history and genealogy of Westchester County is housed in the state-of-the art temperature- and humidity-controlled environment of the Westchester County Records Center located at 2199 Saw Mill River Rd. in Elmsford.

To register for the program, please email bbday@westchestergov.com or call 914-231-1437. Participation will be limited to the first 100 registrants.

State Legislature Limits Governor’s Emergency Powers

By Martin Wilbur

The state legislature passed a resolution last Friday that curtails the governor’s emergency powers that temporarily leaving existing executive orders in place but prevents new directives to be issued without lawmakers’ consent.

After hours of debate and revisions, the measure keeps existing orders intact for 30 days but after that requires Gov. Andrew Cuomo to justify to the legislature why they should remain in place or be modified.

The action comes almost precisely a year after the legislature granted emergency powers during the early days of the COVID-19 pandemic.

“Today, we are in a much different place than where we were a year ago, and now it’s time to return to the traditional checks and balances in our state government that provide the level of accountability and transparency which our residents expect – and deserve,” said state Sen. Peter Harckham (D-Lewisboro).

According to the legislation, Cuomo’s authority to issue any new directives has been revoked, but it allows the governor to extend or modify directives that are in effect. The law requires he give five days’ notice to lawmakers before the extension or modification goes into effect.

The governor is also required to respond publicly to any comments received from the legislature or from local leaders if a directive is extended. His office must also create a searchable database of all executive actions that remain in effect and allow the legislature to terminate a state disaster emergency by concurrent resolution.

Assemblyman Tom Abinanti (D-Pleasantville) said the bill balances keeping the public safe by allowing to maintain common-sense steps to prevent the spread of COVID-19 while leaving certain decisions to the administration and public health officials.

Legislators shouldn’t be involved in the decision-making that would determine what the capacity of restaurant or other venues or facilities, he said.

“We don’t want to be involved in the day-to-day managing of how many people can be in one space,” Abinanti said. “That really has to come from the Health Department and the governor. This does require, when he modifies the existing executive orders, there be a certification from the Health Department and health commissioner that this is an appropriate response.”

As expected, Republicans panned the legislation. Assemblyman Kevin Byrne (R-Mahopac) said the action taken did not return checks and balances. That would have forced the legislature to debate and pass laws instead of relying on the governor to make decisions. Checks and balances would have also forced the legislature to investigate Cuomo’s handling and coverup of COVID-19-related deaths in nursing homes.

“The governor has already abused his emergency powers, and has exercised them for far too long,” Byrne said. “From the very beginning, these powers were only supposed to be temporary. His emergency powers also never gave him the legal authority to undermine our constitutional rights or liberties, but it did not prevent him from trying.”

Assemblywoman Sandy Galef (D-Ossining) said many Republicans were looking to do away with all executive orders, hoping to have a repeal of mandatory mask wearing, capacity restrictions and other limits designed to protect public health.

She said there would be more oversight built into the executive order process.

“I think probably the Republicans kind of want everything to go, maybe like the Texas governor,” Galef said of Gov. Greg Abbott who recently repealed mask-wearing requirements. “I think most of us don’t want what to do that, but we will specifically want to look at some things that maybe are a little too heavy.”

Mahopac Public Library Seeks Board of Trustees Candidates

On Tuesday, June 8, the Mahopac Public Library will hold elections for three open seats on its Board of Trustees. Individuals interested in running for election to the Library Board must be residents of the Mahopac Central School District.

Petitions for the nomination of candidates are available at the library beginning Tuesday, Mar. 9. The election will be held on June 8 at the Mahopac Public Library from 7 a.m. until 9 p.m. Three candidates will each serve a three-year term on the board beginning July 1.

Technology Solutions That Are Just a Right Click Away

By Martin Wilbur

For many companies, pivoting last March from in-person to remote operations was an excursion into unchartered territory fraught with unknowns.

The need to quickly set up employees with safe and secure computers and connections from home was essential for businesses, nonprofits and other organizations.

Right Click Solutions, a Mount Kisco-based computer consulting and IT services business with more than 300 clients in Westchester and Fairfield counties, became a lifeline for their clients who rely on their expertise.

“Some of our clients had listened to some of our recommendations to set up a remote work environment prior to the pandemic. So they were set up, they were seamless once they had the need to work from home,” said Sammi Taplitz, who co-founded the company with her husband, Dan, in 2006. “But a lot of our clients didn’t foresee, most people didn’t foresee this happening. So we really just had to address all the organizations we worked with in order to have that remote work environment.”

She estimated that there was at least a 50 percent spike in daily calls in the first several weeks of the crisis. Despite an operation now with only 13 employees, Right Click Solutions was able to have just over 80 percent of its clients up and running with remote access within the first two weeks of the mid-March shutdown.

However, the challenge of working remotely isn’t as easily solved as employees turning on a computer or laptop from a home workspace. Most of Right Click’s clients — whether it’s the operation with a few hundred employees or the one-person law office — were set up to be in an office environment, said Dan Taplitz.

Viruses protections, firewalls and a secure e-mail system for a company-wide network is more challenging when the overwhelming number of employees are scattered, especially when each employee’s connections are different.

“We knew their network, we knew their operations in the office, we knew everything about their office, but now we’re supporting homes that we’ve never been into,” Dan Taplitz explained of the challenges faced in the early stages of the pandemic. “We don’t know what computers they’re connecting from, we don’t know their internet connection at home. Are they on wireless or are they on a hardwire connection? All these other things complicated things.”

Some companies bought laptops for their employees to limit exposure to problems. But it’s no surprise that there has been a large uptick in cybersecurity, he said. The criminals know that millions more people are working from home.

Some of the issues faced by Right Click’s clients has prompted Sammi and Dan Taplitz to begin a series of free one-hour, quarterly webinars to help clients and others interested in key issues technology-related issues.

Called Right Click Academy, the first workshop will be held Thursday, Mar. 25 from 12 to 1 p.m. addressing Intelligent Composable Business. Topics are derived from industry trends and challenges that companies have faced during the past year.

“It’s one of those things that we compose the IT environment for our clients really based on their needs,” Right Click Solutions’ office manager Sonia Kesselmark said of the first workshop. “We’re not going to give them something they don’t need. We’ve been very conscious of that from a budget perspective and from a needs perspective, so we’re going to go into depth about that.”

Kesselmark said the company had hosted workshops in the past but Sammi and Dan saw a need in the new work environment to address pressing issues that arose during the pandemic.

This year’s three remaining workshops will be Anywhere Operations, Internet Connectivity and Where is Your Exposure. Dates and times have yet to be determined. Anyone is welcome to register.

“The real premise behind the Right Click Academy is that we really feel there’s a need to educate the community, businesses, nonprofit organizations, really just about technology issues in general,” said Sammi Taplitz.

Dan Taplitz said the need to help companies with their unique challenges isn’t going away anytime soon. Many are predicting post-pandemic of the likelihood that companies will continue to have their employees work from home at least a portion of the time.

“We really take this technology world and break it down to simple terms for people so they understand, so they can work more efficiently from home, making it simple for them and at the same time making it secure for them and breaking it down to their terms,” he said.

As I drive our country roads in upper Westchester, I always enjoy the rugged beauty of our stone walls harking back to our 18th century agrarian roots. But I appreciate the newly-constructed versions as well, the most beautiful that I’ve seen of the latter is at Martha Stewart’s home in Katonah.

In this region, we have plenty of stone, mostly granite, deposited in the Ice Age that formed the beautiful mountains, valleys, streams and lakes that make up our gorgeous landscape today.

For me, stonework on my former property – the terraces, stone stairs, patios, paths and walls – were built over four decades of joyful handiwork.

Most of us have more time at home now with the pandemic, so what better time to practice stonework to enhance our landscape. For me, stonework on my former property – the terraces, stone stairs, patios, paths and walls – were built over four decades of joyful handiwork.

Most of us have more time at home now with the pandemic, so what better time to practice stonework to enhance our properties? Property enhancement with stone is a two-part process: sourcing the materials and then applying them in projects that can both utilize the stone found and create some functional or visual effect within the already-existing landscape.

The easy way to source material is simply to go to a garden supply center and buy a pallet or two of stone that is most appealing. To me, this is almost cheating, although I’ve succumbed to it on occasion. Most times, it’s the scavenger hunt for material that I enjoyed.

This quest for sourcing stone started when I acquired my first home, a townhouse in Brooklyn Heights. The original bluestone sidewalk had long since disappeared and there was an old, cracked concrete walkway from the house façade to the street. I hired some “preservationists” who helped me acquire some bluestone slabs from another neighborhood that was being re-developed for new housing.

Between the bluestone slabs and the curb, I installed Belgian block that I had taken from a downtown excavation site (after asking the foreman and slipping him a few bucks). I was in creative heaven, loading down the trunk of my car with these stones that had originally served as ballast on merchant ships returning from Europe. My tailpipe dragged along the ground as I returned home. The combined effect of the cobblestone and bluestone was beautiful.

When I moved to the suburbs, I bought an old farmhouse on 1.5 acres that was to become my canvas for natural stone art for the next 40 years. While it originally had been very stony land as everything in northern Westchester is, the ground had been long cleared of stone to allow for farming.

The stones taken from my property had been deposited on the other side of my road in odd stonewalls that had long ago collapsed into amorphous mounds of rock. I asked the owner of the lot if I could take loose stones there and she agreed. Stone by stone, I gathered as much material as my wheelbarrow and my back could tolerate and started piling my talent for natural stone placement.

My system was this: I used the stone exactly as found. I have no stone cutting tools, nor do I want them. I like the challenge of designing according to individual shapes, colors and textures and how they relate to each other and to the total project, without breaking them up. And I never used mortar to fill cracks or to hold things together.

This was more fun, much like assembling a jigsaw puzzle, whether I was building a wall that needed to be steady and strong or laying paths and patios on sand. I required tools, nor do I want them. I like the challenge of designing according to individual shapes, colors and textures and how they relate to each other and to the total project, without breaking them up. And I never used mortar to fill cracks or to hold things together.

When the last survey was done of that property, I was thrilled to find that every patio, seating area, terrace and path had been included by the surveyor into the document. It was testament to something I had created that was actually architectural and long lasting and hopefully to be enjoyed by generations to come.

Lutheran Pastor Takes a Different Route to Find His Calling

By Martin Wilbur

Kevin O’Hara had dreams of becoming a teacher while growing up in suburban Philadelphia.

But as he pursued a career in education at Elizabethtown College near Harrisburg, an instructor remarked to him, “I know you’re not going to be a teacher. You’re going to finish this; you’re going to graduate from college and good luck.”

Struck by the bluntness of the assessment, O’Hara was set a bit adrift. It was his recuperation from knee surgery the following summer that unwittingly sparked what would be his new calling.

During the long days of lying on the couch, he picked up the Bible, but not because he was a believer at the time. O’Hara was a rebellious young adult and set out to prove that God doesn’t exist.

O’Hara’s mother, a regular parishioner at Augustus Lutheran Church where the family worshipped not far from home, saw him reading the Bible one day and suggested he attend seminary.

“She didn’t know that I wasn’t very happy with God, but I had nothing else to do, so by the time I graduated college I decided I was going to go straight to seminary, maybe become a youth leader;” O’Hara recalled.

A mentor who was a Lutheran pastor inspired O’Hara to take the next step and consider becoming a pastor, understanding that life and people aren’t perfect.

“He would take me fishing and that’s all we would do,” he said. “Spend that time together and he would inspire me just to be, and just to know that no matter how screwed up I was, not matter how I don’t live up to my expectations, let alone the world’s expectations, it would be okay.”

Last month, O’Hara, 36, became the new pastor at Emanuel Lutheran Church in Pleasantville, leading a congregation with close to 300 members. His new assignment presented itself after spending more than seven years as the religious leader of a church in Patchogue on Long Island.

What was gratifying to O’Hara was not only receiving well in excess of the two-thirds approval needed from the church’s membership to become its new pastor, but a unanimous vote from the congregation’s youth members.

It comes less than two years after the departure of Paul Egensteiner, who served as Emanuel Lutheran’s pastor for 22 years before he was elevated to bishop.

For O’Hara, his job right now is to listen and learn more about the congregation, its leaders and the community, not try to copy his predecessor’s style. In fact, upon getting the job at Emanuel Lutheran, the advice he received from Egensteiner was to do what he hears from God.

“If we think that we know where we’re going at this point, we’re probably not realizing the fullness of who God is at this point,” O’Hara said.

Parishioner and Pleasantville resident Sandi Whynott said what struck many of the church’s members during the search was O’Hara’s energy, enthusiasm, intellect, wit and compassion. She said that most people who meet O’Hara feel an immediate connection.

“He was quoting Leviticus and then Seinfeld in the next (moment),” Whynot said. “I mean, he’s just so relatable and approachable.”

At the beginning of February, O’Hara moved with his husband, also named Kevin, to an old house in the village, about a two-block walk from the church.

Looking back, part of O’Hara’s challenges that he had to overcome was his sexual orientation. While in seminary in 2009, the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America decided to be accepting of LGBTQ pastors.

But it wasn’t clear sailing for O’Hara. In fact, the new policy document hadn’t been adopted yet. Appearing before the Candidacy Committee, his relator had learned of his sexual orientation and tried to get O’Hara to incriminate himself, repeatedly asking him if there’s anything that he needed to tell the members.

O’Hara replied that how he was falling deeper into debt after paying for seminary despite working multiple jobs and that he couldn’t afford to visit the doctor.

He was accepted by the committee, allowing him to advance to his internship. The relator was removed.

O’Hara said the reception he and Kevin have received in Pleasantville has been overwhelming. The day they arrived their refrigerator was stocked with food and they received well wishes from the congregation.

“I’m completely humbled at this point,” he said. “I’m a little overwhelmed but we’ll take one day at a time and I will hopefully fill the bishop’s shoes and continue to lead this congregation.”
Westchester to Offer Police Officer Civil Service Exam in May

Westchester County will be holding a police officer civil service exam for the first time in five years and a special effort is under way to encourage more people of color to take the test and pursue a law enforcement career.

County Executive George Latimer said last week that the Department of Public Safety will be reaching out to diverse communities and organizations this month to increase awareness of the upcoming exam, to be held on May 15 or 16. The deadline to file to take the test is Mar. 29. Details are available at www.westchestergov.com/hr.

“It is more important than ever that our police departments reflect the diversity of the communities they serve,” Latimer said. “That is a message we have heard consistently in a year where police reform and reimagining has been a top priority. The goal of increasing the diversity of our police departments begins with having a diverse pool of applicants take this test.”

The exam, to be administered by the County’s Department of Human Resources, will result in a list of eligible police officer candidates for the Westchester County Department of Public Safety, the cities of Rye and Peekskill and all towns and villages in the county.

Latimer said the county police and the Department of Human Resources will be sharing information with a variety of organizations to help ensure that a diverse pool of applicants takes the exam. These include community-based groups, houses of worship, nonprofit agencies, local colleges, libraries and employment centers.

Paul Hood, a retired Sleepy Hollow police sergeant and president of the Westchester Rockland Guardians Association, is also encouraging men and women of color to pursue a police career.

“In a career as a law enforcement officer, you have an opportunity to learn and grow as a person,” said Hood, a member of the Westchester County Police Board. “It affords you the opportunity to make a positive difference in the communities you serve, allowing you to become a beacon of light to many.”

Matthew Lewis, a county police detective, is also encouraging young men and women of color to take the upcoming test. Lewis had his eye on a career in sports media when he was in college but took a police exam after a recruiter chatted with him on campus.

“I have my degree in broadcasting and I took the police exam as a Plan B. Plan B turned into Plan A,” Lewis said.

He has never looked back or regretted his choice.

“I love what I do and I wouldn’t be in my 27th year if I didn’t,” Lewis added. “I would advise anyone to take a look at a law enforcement career. I have had a very rewarding career, and as an African-American male I know I’ve made a difference.”

The county’s recruiting and outreach efforts across Westchester will include presentations by county police personnel that may take place in person, when possible, and via videoconference to reach as many people as possible. The county and its police are also utilizing social media channels to spread the news about the test.

Commissioner Thomas A. Gleason noted that the test is only given once every four years on average. Due to the COVID-19 pandemic, the test could not be held as planned in 2020. He encouraged anyone considering a law enforcement career not to miss the opportunity.

Gleason also said the county police would not only be raising awareness about the exam but encouraging test-takers to aim for a career with the Westchester County Police.

“We are very proud of our Department, very proud of our people and very proud of the work we do every day to keep Westchester safe,” Gleason said. “If you are looking for a rewarding career, and an opportunity for professional growth and advancement, the Westchester County police might be the right place for you.”

Gleason said anyone interested in learning more about the Westchester County police can find information on the department’s Facebook, Instagram and Twitter pages, on its YouTube channel and on the department’s website.

Organizations interested in setting up a virtual presentation can send an email request to wcpdrecruitment@westchestergov.com.
Winter Turns to Spring, and Birds Abound

By Brian Kluepfel

As the last (hopefully) snows of the winter recede with each day, I look forward to the spring migration and more comfortable walking weather. It's also possible that higher temperatures may benefit my aching knee.

But that doesn't mean it's been an entirely barren landscape over the past few months. Venturing out to a few local spots, I've seen bald eagles, house finches, Carolina wrens, plenty of northern cardinals, the ubiquitous and raucous corvids (crows, ravens and jays) and even eastern bluebirds. Not to mention the eager house sparrows who congregate on my porch every morning for a handful of seed.

I have many people to thank for keeping my interest in birding alive. Anne Swaim, executive director of Saw Mill River Audubon, added me to a Whatsapp group for local bird sightings. Though I made a couple of missteps in the first two weeks, once group-replying and once mis-identifying a duck, I haven't been kicked off yet. (I fear an expulsion committee may be forming, however.)

I'd also like to thank my friends, Karalyn Lamb of Pollinator Pathway Northeast for hipping me to the Whatsapp group's existence, and Larry Trachtenberg for giving me good directions and warning me of the many potholes on the New Croton Reservoir perimeter road.

My comrade, Scott Craven, of the Ossining Public Library, a man who'd you definitely want on your pub quiz team, sends me updates from the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation's Hudson River Almanac. This includes citizen science sightings of river denizens like the glass eel, a "fish of the week," (of 233 fish species in the river!) and lots of bird and mammal activity. Did you know that "northern stargazers have an organ in their head that can deliver an electric charge that can stun prey and perhaps ward off predators?" I didn't even know such a fish existed.

People see seals way upriver from the ocean; people find evidence of eagles murdering pilated woodpeckers. People see all sorts of things. Finch irruptions in Ulster, seal spotting off Cold Spring, the almanac is a trove of contemporary Hudson Valley natural history. So thanks, Scott.

Today my favorite birding partner — my wife Paula — and I saw three different woodpecker species, some tufted titmice, dark-eyed juncos, a house finch, a pair of red-tailed hawks and a passel of mourning doves. And that was just taking our compost to Cedar Lane Park in Ossining.

A subsequent drive over to the New Croton Reservoir revealed dozens of coots — the true chickens of the sea — a cormorant and some lovely mergansers. I'd like to say I saw a lesser scap, too, but I'd hate to guess wrong and get jettisoned from the Whatsapp group.

All in all, lovely birding on a crisp winter's day, and considering there is both a Quaker Ridge Road and Quaker Bridge Road, and that they actually exist, it's a miracle I, not the savviest of suburban navigators, made it home at all.

Good will to all and happy birding. Brian Kluepfel is a proud member of Saw Mill River Audubon and encourages you to join, buy seed and take part in the beautiful birding community. He also writes for Westchester Magazine, Birdwatching Magazine and the Lonely Planet travel series. Find him at birdmanwalking.com.

A Tale of Two Patricks: But Who Was First?

We’re in the month where all eyes turn to the Patron Saint of Ireland, as well as the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York.

Facing a second consecutive year without a parade, Facing a second consecutive year without a parade, we celebrate on the anniversary of his death, March 17.

Enduring years of captivity in the north, he came to know his captors and the people of Ireland well. Eventually escaping, he vowed to return to Ireland and bring the gospel of Christ to the people he had come to love. He did just that, but not in 432, as is popularly believed, but in 461, at the same time that Palladius’s days either had drawn, or were shortly drawing to a close.

The latter Patrick’s mission concentrated on the north and west of Ireland, in Ulster and Connacht, places Palladius had not touched. He died in 495, according to no less of an authority than St. Colmcille, and is buried in Downpatrick, in Ulster. Where Palladius’s bones may lay is unknown, no less a loss than that of his very existence over the centuries that followed his work.

So, if the weather and COVID allow, perhaps a substitute for a March parade might be July 6. Of course, that would likely not be looked upon fondly by others on the island of Ireland who have their own celebration just six days later, on the 12th. But that’s another tale, entirely!

Pleasantville resident Brian McGowan was born and raised in the Bronx, a second-, third- and fifth-generation Irish-American/Canadian, as his immigrant ancestors followed several paths to the New World. How the Pandemic is Impacting Children and Families

More than 2.7 million American children are growing up in grandfamilies – families in which grandparents, other adult family members or close family friends are raising children.

A new report highlights how the pandemic has amplified their unique challenges, and offers solutions to better serve them.

The report, “Facing a Pandemic: Families Living Together During COVID-19 and Thriving Beyond,” authored by the nonprofit Generations United and funded by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation and Casey Family Programs, points out that at a time when older adults are being cautioned to keep their distance from children because of the heightened risk of infection and death from COVID-19, for grandfamilies, that distance is impossible.

Advocates point out that these caregivers are the first line of defense for children during the pandemic, having stepped in when parents cannot raise them for many reasons, including cases where children’s parents have died from COVID-19. At the same time, 30 percent of kin caregivers lack an alternative caregiving plan if they should die or become disabled, a troubling statistic in the face of the pandemic, which disproportionately affects older adults.

While grandfamilies are diverse in geography, income and race, the report finds that caregivers in grandfamilies are disproportionately Black or Native American; nearly half of grandparent caregivers are over age 60; and one in four grandparent caregivers has a disability. These are the same populations that are more likely to be impacted by the pandemic and die as a result.

While we’re all impacted by COVID-19, grandfamilies, especially, have had tough realities, with limited support systems,” said Donna Butts, executive director of Generations United, a nonprofit with the mission of improving the lives of children, youth and older people. “State and local child welfare and other agencies must better support them during COVID-19 recovery and beyond.

Federal, state and local governments recognize foster families and provide them access to resources, but there is little available for grandfamilies raising children outside of foster care. While Congress included support for grandfamilies in the December 2020 COVID-19 relief package, including better access to kinship navigator programs, which help connect families to information and community support as well as provide some direct help to families to meet emergency needs, advocates say that is just a start.

“They are the first line of defense for children in the face of the pandemic,” said Donna Butts, executive director of Generations United, a nonprofit with the mission of improving the lives of children, youth and older people.

Nutrition Month Highlights Needs of Children During Pandemic

National Nutrition Month, held every March, has even greater meaning this year as it comes at a time when many people in the Lower Hudson Valley, particularly children, continue to reel from the effects of a now-year-old pandemic.

Gina Devito, director of wellness initiatives at Open Door Family Medical Center and a registered dietitian, reports a significant increase over the last year in the number of children and families they see suffering from food insecurity – defined as a lack of consistent access to adequate, affordable and nutritious food.

This is not surprising, as the population served by the Open Door, a federally qualified health center, has historically suffered from food insecurity. This has only intensified during COVID-19.

“Being at home, especially during the winter, has made it all the more challenging for Open Door families,” said Devito.

This is due to a number of factors: the lack of access to affordable, healthy food; being physically inactive and not exercising; and families under financial stress because of job loss or a reduction in hours. Even getting to the grocery store can become an issue – whether it be because of having to quarantine, being infected with COVID or having a fear of the virus.

“Throughout the pandemic, we’ve seen weight gain at a much faster rate among our pediatric population,” she said. “The lack of access to healthy foods and opportunities to exercise has caused significant issues.

“We’re noting many metabolic changes, including weight gain, increased blood pressure and elevated glucose, cholesterol and triglyceride levels. This can lead to behavioral problems with children having trouble balancing their moods, losing focus and experiencing sleeping problems. It may impact their school performance. There are a lot of determining factors that show us that many children are struggling.”

Due to its commitment to chronic disease prevention and wellness, Open Door has strong, longstanding partnerships with food banks, community centers and other locally-based organizations committed to ending hunger and strengthening health equity. Working closely with groups like Feeding Westchester, Cornell Cooperative Extension of Westchester County and the Larchmont-Mamaroneck Hunger Task Force, Open Door helps in the distribution of nutritious food, medical supplies and face masks to area families in need. Where food was previously picked up at Open Door sites, it’s now largely delivered directly to patients’ homes by volunteer drivers. The number of food bundles distributed has increased dramatically since last spring.

Under normal circumstances, Open Door provides integrated care services to help low-income families reduce or prevent the impact of life-threatening chronic illnesses like heart disease, diabetes, asthma, cancer and hypertension. A major component of this is education, which includes helping parents and children gain a better understanding of their nutritional needs, teaching them how to read labels, instructing them how to cook their favorite meals in a healthy manner and helping them make better food choices.

Throughout the pandemic, Open Door was able to continue to offer health education to area families through telehealth and virtual visits.

“Open Door has worked closely with families to connect them to the information or walk them step-by-step through the process,” Devito said. “Many more as a result are now equipped for digital learning.”

In acknowledgement of the vulnerability of populations like this, the White House recently sent more than 25 million masks to community health centers and food pantries across the country in an effort to increase access for low-income people. Many low-income Americans still lack affordable access to this basic protection.

“We’ve increased efforts to help our adult patients learn more about managing their chronic conditions at home,” Devito said.

This includes teaching patients how to self-monitor their blood glucose and blood pressure, promoting appropriate foods and portion sizes and monitoring medication adherence.

“Open Door specializes in working with patients who have high needs and we’re well-equipped to find ways to manage really challenging situations like this,” she said. “Patients may be hesitant about virtual visits at first, but when they try it, they are engaged and see the value of the service for themselves and their children.”

Open Door Family Medical Centers’ mission has remained consistent since it opened in 1972: to provide high-quality health care that’s affordable, accessible and efficient. Today, it cares for nearly 1,000 adults and children every day in Westchester and Putnam counties – with more than 300,000 patient visits – regardless of one’s ability to pay.

In addition to medical, dental, pediatric, women’s, podiatry and behavioral health care offered in its Ossining, Port Chester, Sleepy Hollow, Mount Kisco, Brewster, Mamaroneck and Saugerties facilities, as well as its school-based health centers, Open Door promotes wellness, good nutrition, stress reduction and physical activity to help families stay healthy.
The Ever-changing Landscape of Virtual Wineries

By Nick Antonaccio

Last week I focused on four business models for producing wine across the globe. As I stated, many wine consumers believe that the process for making wine is similar for all wines. The supposition is that grapes are gently handpicked at the epome of ripeness, carefully sorted for to weed out rotten grapes, leaves and insects and then lovingly crushed, fermented, aged and bottled, all under the watchful eye of a master winemaker.

Although this process does occur in many wineries, it as a far cry from the vast quantity of wines sold in the United States. For the most part, winemaking is a financially driven business, rather than an individual’s passion.

According to bw166, a beverage industry advisory and research firm, we consumed about 4.8 billion bottles of wine last year. The advisory and research firm, we consumed about 4.8 billion bottles of wine last year from about 125 countries. Of these, the United States leads the world in consumption, followed by France, Italy, and Spain.

For the most part, winemaking is a business model, a big business model, a big business model, a big business model, a big business model.

Other than for idealistic oenophiles willing to pay full spectrum, the typical consumer is now being offered a level of price and quality wines never before experienced. That makes for a win-win business model.

You Heard It Through the Grapevine

By Sarah Sowards

Many aspects of life have changed. The typical “keys, wallet, phone” check we conduct when leaving our homes has inevitably evolved into “keys, wallet, phone…shoot, I forgot the mask!”

Love it or hate it, wearing masks to prevent the spread of COVID-19 is still recommended by the World Health Organization and the Centers for Disease Control. But as restrictions have lessened and our world start to ever so slowly return to normal, what does mask wearing mean for those exercising and working at Club Fit?

What is it like? Is it safe to exercise with a mask?

Most members who have returned to work out have given us positive feedback. One member noted that she was surprised that he did not find his breathing was restricted like he anticipated it would be. Another mentioned that she was hesitant to return with a mask but then found, tried and loved a product known as a lip mask. The plastic device is placed over your mouth and pushes the mask away from your face to increase the air flow within the mask. This member has since recommended the lip guard to everyone she knows who exercises with a mask on.

A third member discussed how working out with a mask is not her favorite thing, but she wants to work out more than she wants to remain inactive as this winter has dragged on. She hasn’t really noticed a difference in her performance or breathing when exercising with a mask on. The only discomfort stems from sweating in a mask, which then just reinforces that I am actually doing a good job with my workout.

But it doesn’t bother her much enough with anecdotal details. What does science say?

Many studies have been conducted within the last year examining the effect of wearing a mask while exercising. One experiment saw participants randomly assigned to exercise with no mask, a surgical mask and an N-95 mask. There were no significant differences between the groups in their heart rates, respiratory rates, blood pressure, oxygen saturation levels or time it took for them to reach exhaustion from their exercise with moderate to strenuous aerobic activity.

These results suggest that mask-wearing during exercise is safe for healthy individuals and that the differences between the groups were negligible at best.

A study examining exercise performance while wearing masks randomly assigned participants into groups that wore no masks, those who wore surgical masks and another that wore cloth masks. Using cycle ergometry, participants in all groups exercised to exhaustion. Data revealed no differences between the different groups’ oxygen saturation levels, tissue oxygenation indexes, ratings of exertion or heart rate.

Subjective ratings of exercise performance, which were measured in time to exhaustion and peak power, were not significantly different between groups. All of this evidence suggests that while working out with a mask might not be the most comfortable, it isn’t something that will hurt you if you are healthy.

As we progress through these difficult times, we will have to be open-minded and learn to adapt. We will have to find a new normal. Fortunately, we will not have to do this alone.

With every precaution possible, Club Fit has adjusted that new normal with safety as the top priority. Our members have come together as a community to help ensure each other’s health and safety as well. From meticulous cleaning efforts, to investments in scientifically proven sanitation products, to the staff’s commitment to enforcing physical distancing and safety guidelines and the members’ support of the efforts, Club Fit intends to remain a safe environment for members to exercise and maintain their physical activities and health.

We are doing our part to move forward, and we only ask that you at least try doing the same. The masks are not as bad as they might seem.
