

College Student Murdered Upstate Lived in Patterson

By Rick Pezzullo

An aspiring educator and accomplished cellist who grew up in Patterson was murdered Friday near the upstate SUNY Potsdam campus where she was a senior.

Elizabeth Howell, 21, a 2018 graduate of Brewster High School, was found unconscious with gunshot wounds on College Park Road near the entrance to the college about 5:50 p.m. on Feb. 18. She was transported to Canton Potsdam Hospital, where she was pronounced dead.

Michael Snow, 31, of Massena, NY, was charged with one count of second-degree murder in connection with the homicide. On the date of the homicide, State Police said Snow was observed operating a gray Honda Civic that had damage to the driver's side door.

State Police, the Potsdam Police

Department, University Police Department at SUNY Potsdam, St. Lawrence County Sheriff's Office and the United States Department of Homeland Security are continuing to investigate what appears to be a random crime.

A preliminary investigation determined Snow's vehicle passed through Potsdam, Hopkinton, Malone, Westville, Hogansburg and Massena between 5 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. on Feb. 18.

Snow was arraigned in Town of Potsdam Court and was remanded to St. Lawrence County Jail with no bail.

Howell, an honors student, was studying music education in the college's Crane School of Music and played in the Crane Symphony Orchestra. Classes were cancelled Monday and plans are underway for a memorial service.

"We are in disbelief at the sudden loss of one of our own, Elizabeth Howell '22, a music education student at our Crane School of Music. Our thoughts are with all of Beth's friends and family during this difficult time," SUNY Potsdam posted on Facebook. "Beth was a cellist who performed with the Crane Symphony Orchestra, and she was an aspiring educator with a bright future ahead of her. No words can express the sadness we share as a campus community following this tragic loss."

The Brewster Teachers Association also released a statement on the tragedy.

"We are deeply saddened by the news that a former student of ours, Elizabeth "Beth" Howell, was tragically killed on Friday night in Potsdam, NY. She was a 2018 graduate. Our thoughts and prayers are with her family, friends, and all who had the privilege to teach, coach and know her."

Community Packs Tense but Orderly Lakeland School Meeting

By Abby Luby

A standing-room-only crowd filled the Lakeland High School auditorium as police guarded the lobby and aisles and were on stage with trustees during the Board of Education's tense but orderly meeting on Feb. 17.

The tense atmosphere came one week after the Feb. 10 meeting had become disorderly when several individuals screamed racial epithets and Interim Superintendent of Schools Dr. Karen Gagliardi was escorted by police from the building. That forced the district to add security for last Thursday's meeting to ensure the safety of those in attendance.

Byrne Receives GOP Backing in Bid for County Executive

By Rick Pezzullo

State Assemblyman Kevin Byrne picked up what likely could be the golden ticket to becoming the next Putnam County Executive when he received the endorsement of the Republican Committee last week.

By a margin of 148 to 76 in Mahopac on Feb. 16, Byrne outlasted Legislator Carl Albano for the nomination. Albano reportedly will decide this week if he will seek a Republican primary on June 28.

Byrne was nominated by Southeast district leader and former Assemblyman Will Stephens, Jr., who praised Byrne as a "remarkable leader who has demonstrated a proven ability to work with people and accomplish real results for the people of Putnam County." The nomination was seconded by long-time Carmel district leader and former county GOP First Vice Chairman Jack Hufnagel, who highlighted Kevin's dedication, commitment, and integrity.

"Those following this process closely know that my team and I had to work very hard to merit this crucial endorsement," Byrne stated. "We did what Putnam Republicans always do: keep the faith and reach out, every day, to make the case to our friends and neighbors. We've been rewarded with their trust and support, for which I'm extremely grateful."

"Now I'm honored to move forward with all my fellow Republicans to win the votes and confidence of everyone in Putnam County, no matter their party, as a leader determined to keep this beautiful place, the place I've called home my entire life, the best for living, working, and raising a family—today, and for the future," Byrne added.

A lifelong resident of Putnam who currently resides in Mahopac, Byrne is serving his third term in the Assembly. Prior to being elected, Byrne worked in healthcare administration for New York's largest private multi-specialty medical group. He also served as a regional director for the American Heart Association and deputy district director to former Congresswoman Nan Hayworth.

Byrne's nomination was not a slam dunk as Putnam County Executive MaryEllen Odell, who is term limited, endorsed Albano, as did Republican Chairman Tony Scannapieco, who penned a critical letter to district leaders trying to persuade them to choose Albano.

The Democratic Party has yet to find a candidate for the office Odell has held since 2011.

Mahopac Art Students Display Work at Katonah Museum Show

Bethany Itzla, a Mahopac High School senior whose striking print of koi fish is on display at the Young Artists 2022 show at the Katonah Museum of Art, said every gallery show is an education.

"I have had my work shown in public a couple of times before," Bethany said. "It's always interesting to hear what people say. But this time it was different because we helped install the show. To hear people talk about how a piece fits in with the work that's displayed around it — that made me think about art in a new way."

Ten MHS seniors have art works in the Katonah Museum show, which runs through February 27, and four of them helped install the show.

"It's a great opportunity for students," said Sean Flanagan, the interim chair of the high school Art Department. "Giving young artists a chance to show their work is really important. Our department has made sure there are many opportunities for student artists coming up."

Mahopac High School's Computer Graphics and Animation Class is working with the music department to create an animated visual for the Pops Concert on March 9. Later that same week, Mahopac elementary, middle and high school students will all be represented at the Garrison Art Center's annual School Invitational Theme Exhibition, or SITE show, which opens March 12.

Mahopac Library displays student work in a bi-monthly rotation, and the Jefferson Valley Mall is planning a show of Mahopac student artwork. Then there's the community-wide "District Art Hop" in May, which will showcase K-12 student work at Mahopac High School, Mahopac Library and the Putnam Arts Council.

But, the exhibit space Flanagan is most excited about is a gallery being set up right in the halls of the Mahopac High School art wing. Called "The Baldwin Gallery," the hallway will allow student artworks to be shown where the artists' biggest, most important audience — other students — can see them every day.

"We are all kind of used to having our art publicly displayed because we put it on Instagram and people react to it," said Manny Martinez, who has a piece in the Katonah Museum show. "But to have it where people can walk around and look at it from different angles and talk about it in the real world, that's really cool."

It will also be a lot more convenient for busy young artists to have a space in their own school to see each other's work.

Holly Cote, a senior, has not yet even found the time to see her own painting which is hanging in the Young Artists show at Katonah Museum.

"I want to go, but I've been busy with school," Holly said. "I also have an internship at an interior design business in Beacon, a job at Carvel and I'm on the ski team."

Tensions have been mounting since last year when the district established a Diversity, Equity and Inclusion (DEI) team, drawing the ire from a group of parents opposed to the program. Those parents have grown increasingly vocal at board meetings.

A large contingent of the audience was in solidarity with the district's proposed DEI program, including the Lakeland Federation of Teachers and the Yorktown Democratic Committee. Although the mood was tense, there was also a sense of comradery and enthusiasm.

At the start of the meeting, Board President Adam Kaufman said comments made at the previous meeting were reprehensible.

"We welcome public comment and want to hear from those that disagree with us but with civility and decorum," he said. "We have a larger police presence and if anyone yells out or is disruptive, they will be removed. If they fail to comply the police will be pressing no-trespassing charges."

There were 34 people, including about six students, who signed up to speak Thursday evening. Miguel Feliciano, a Walter Panas High School senior and founder and president of the school's Equity Club, asked how the community became so divided. Feliciano was joined by students from several social justice advocacy clubs who openly support the district's proposed DEI program.

"We are prepared to join the DEI team and make our voices heard," said Feliciano. "We are here to stand up for what's right and stand up against hatred and bigotry."

Since last spring, the district has added members to the DEI team but its progress has slowed.

Michael Morey, a Panas graduate, lambasted the board for allowing people with extreme prejudices be on the DEI team and for renaming the DEI program Equity for All.

"We won't even use the words diversity and inclusion in this program and that says we are listening to voices we shouldn't be listening to," Morey said.

He said past actions by the board led to the disturbing outbursts at the previous meeting. He singled out Trustee Becky Burfeind who had previously stated that some voices were being excluded from the DEI process.

"She gave credence to the notion that all voices should be at the table, even the most extreme voices," Morey said. "We heard those voices last week; they were loud and divisive and represent a fringe movement in this country of white grievance politics and they should not be at the table. For too long the board has let those voices slow-walk progress of DEI. You haven't done the best job in leading this district."

Many speakers commenting on the disturbing behavior on Feb. 10 were also critical of the board and its apparent inability to be in control of the meetings.

"As board trustees, I'm sorry, but your lack of leadership in regard to DEI and managing this from the onset, have allowed this type of behavior to fester," said Lisa Piccirillo, a 24-year district resident and mother of three children. "You need to unequivocally denounce this behavior."

"As a student, the incivility of adults acting in this way was disturbing and disconcerting for me and my peers," added seventh-grader Alex Ascanio, who received a standing ovation. "From a middle schooler, the adults in our district must do better. Do better."

Judy McLaughlin, team leader for the Lakeland chapter of Save Our Schools, a national organization that is critical of DEI programs and of critical race theory, said parents had the right to question their children's constitutional rights and the changing curriculum without being slandered.

"DEI has so many good things but not all of it is good," McLaughlin said. "The Black Lives Matter movement has been involved in Lakeland's DEI (program) and this has caused many to believe only one viewpoint is valued and the diversity of thought has no seat."

McLaughlin urged the audience to watch previous boards meetings to become fully informed.

Michael Lillis, president of the Lakeland Federation of Teachers who led a contingent of teachers to the meeting, said he was troubled about the district's future and referenced last week's meeting.

"The past year a great deal of toxicity has been spewed into this room," Lillis said. "There is a direct line between the behavior in this room and the behavior in our classrooms. We can no longer watch from the sidelines."

Lillis asked for a moment of silence to show appreciation for board members, after which he said, "Silence can communicate as much as any scream."

Daks Armstrong, a guidance counselor at Yorktown High School, said last week's board meeting was a wake-up call.

"Racism exists in our community in a big way," he said. "If you want to continue to brag about our amazing town and school district, we need to do this (DEI) work."

Impassioned comments often brought applause and standing ovations. But some comments elicited boos and jeers from the crowd, including when Cortlandt resident Heather Conway repeatedly asked how the district was paying for illegal students and berated the board for complying for the state's mask mandate for public schools.

Conway compared the board's attitude to that of Nazi supporters during World War II who also said they were just doing their job.

"Your actions are just as complacent as they were," she said.

Attending the meeting last night was Rep. Jamaal Bowman (D-Yonkers), who would represent Yorktown if he wins re-election in the fall.

"I'm here to listen and learn about what's going on in order to understand the community, the parents, teachers and students," Bowman told The Examiner. "This is happening all over the country and is based on historic segregation writ large. It's important to know about each other, about the ignorance and hatred."

Also in attendance were state Sen. Pete Harckham (D-Lewisboro), whose district includes Lakeland, state Sen. Shelley Mayer (D-Yonkers), chair of the Senate's Education Committee, Westchester County legislators Colin Smith and Vedat Gashi and Yorktown Supervisor Matt Slater.

Westchester Unveils New Opioid Prevention Effort as Crisis Deepens

By Martin Wilbur

A sharp rise in Westchester overdose deaths since the start of the COVID-19 pandemic has prompted county health and law enforcement officials to partner on a new initiative to save lives.

County Executive George Latimer and District Attorney Mimi Rocah last Wednesday introduced the Opioid Response and Overdose Prevention Initiative (ORI) that coordinates strategies among the Departments of Community Mental Health, Health, Social Services, Public Safety, the Medical Examiner's Office, the and the County Executive's office to partner with the District Attorney's office and local and federal law enforcement to try and reverse the disturbing trend.

Rocah said too many families across Westchester have lost loved ones in recent years. A serious problem before the onset of the pandemic, overdoses have continued to soar. In 2020, there were 119 overdoses in the county, representing about a 30 percent spike from 2019.

"Too many young people have struggled painfully with substance abuse and too many of our communities have shouldered the burden of this crisis, facing crime and sometimes violence driven by illegally trafficking opioids," Rocah said.

The strategy will include collaboration on public health and law enforcement data sharing; identifying the communities most in need of overdose support services; provide more effective education, training and distribution of Narcan, a medication administered to reverse serious overdoses; increase community education, outreach and support services to populations in need; make access easier for those who need addiction, mental health and co-occurring treatment, harm reduction and family support services, including substance use prevention services; and implement evidence-based treatment approaches for individuals with addiction who are also struggling with co-occurring mental health needs.

Michael Orth, the commissioner of the Department of Community Mental Health, said the ORI initiative brings together the resources and those with the expertise to address the county's opioid crisis.

As people have been more isolated over the past two years, the need to help people has exploded, he said.

"We have all seen the need before and since the pandemic as it relates to opioid and overdose," Orth said. "Tragically, many of our residents have been impacted by opioids as a result of pain treatment (and) management, traumatic stress, addiction and co-occurring medical substance abuse."

What has added to the crisis is the presence of fentanyl in those substances, said Terrance Raynor, deputy commissioner of the Department of Public Safety. Fentanyl, which is inexpensive and easy for dealers to obtain, makes an opioid 80 to 100 times more potent than morphine, he said.

Last year alone in Westchester, law enforcement recovered more than 11 pounds of fentanyl, 12,000 fentanyl pills, 20 pounds of heroin and 2,000 pounds of cocaine. It is fentanyl that has helped cause the explosion of overdoses.

"Many drug users do not realize the product they're taking contains this deadly substance, which is the leading cause of overdose deaths throughout the country, hence the need for first responders to continue training in the use of Narcan in the hopes of saving lives," Raynor said.

Some of the strategies use a novel approach. County Health Commissioner Dr. Sherlita Amler said, for example, public safety, the Department of Community Mental Health and Social Services are piloting a program to install lockboxes in homeless shelters that will contain Narcan and fentanyl test kits.

"Going forward, the unique expertise of the ORI representatives here is going to help us gain valuable insight into the way we understand this problem and presents us (a chance) to make even greater strides we hope in our overdose prevention efforts," Amler said.

Latimer said he recognizes that solutions to ease the opioid crisis have been elusive but the county is making a bold statement to protect those who are in jeopardy of falling prey.

"This interdisciplinary effort is to try and save that other person who has a son or a daughter who's in jeopardy from going through this and losing their life and then causing ripples all throughout the lives of their neighbors," Latimer said. "That's what we're trying to prevent with this."

Westchester County Executive George Latimer speaks last week at the launch of the Opioid Response and Overdose Prevention Initiative, which seeks to address the spiraling number of overdoses in the county.

Communities Grapple With How to Provide More Affordable Housing

Accessory Dwelling, Transit Oriented Plans Removed From State Budget

By Martin Wilbur

Gov. Kathy Hochul removed two controversial pieces of housing-related legislation from her proposed Executive Budget last week, both of which drew harsh criticisms from most municipal officials throughout Westchester and the state.

The accessory dwelling unit (ADU) law, originally proposed by state Sen. Peter Harcham (D-Lewisboro) and Hochul's own Transit Oriented Development (TOD) proposal, both of which had been inserted into the Fiscal Year 2023 budget, were set aside last Thursday evening by the governor.

In a statement, Hochul said after receiving significant pushback from communities across New York, she would opt to take a different route to make housing in the state more affordable.

"I have heard real concerns about the proposed approach on accessory dwelling units and transit-oriented development, and I understand that my colleagues in the State Senate believe a different set of tools is needed, even if they agree with the goal of supporting the growth of this kind of housing," Hochul said. "So, I am submitting a 30-day amendment to my budget legislation that removes requirements on localities in order to facilitate a conversation about how we build consensus around solutions."

Towns throughout Westchester and elsewhere in recent weeks had begun approving resolutions rebuking the plan, which would have allowed each residential parcel to have an accessory dwelling unit with sharply reduced restrictions. Local officials argued it amounted to loss of local control that would irreparably harm their communities and the environment.

For some, the TOD proposal was an even greater concern, which would have allowed up to 25 units per acre within a half-mile radius of a train station.

After her announcement, Harcham issued a one-paragraph statement concerning the governor's decision.

"I understand Governor Hochul's decision to remove the ADU initiative from the Executive Budget; this action highlights our primary concern, which is to get all of the details of the bill right, rather than enact a bill right away," he stated. "I will continue to engage with stakeholders and work to settle all concerns with this legislation. It is important that we keep driving a conversation, however, on affordable housing for our workforce and equitable treatment for our residents."

Despite most towns in Westchester having adopted forms of local ADU regulations as well as affordable housing legislation based on the county's model ordinance stemming from the county's 2009 affordable housing settlement with the federal government, Harcham said those efforts have failed to put a dent in what he described as a housing crisis across the state.

Proponents of his bill pointed to the 2019 Westchester Housing Needs Assessment, which concluded 11,703 additional units of affordable housing were needed to meet demand in the county alone. The assessment came 15 years after Rutgers University released a study for the county that had pegged that number at 10,768.

The 2019 assessment also found that more than 20 percent of county residents spent more than half their income on housing expenses.

Harcham said earlier last week, two days before Hochul pulled the ADU legislation, that as earnest as the attempts have been to have greater housing affordability, those efforts have failed.

"The reason why the state needs to get involved is because our system of local control has failed when it comes to housing," he said. "We have a housing crisis in New York, not just in Westchester, but let's focus on Westchester. The average price for a new home last month was over $750,000. We pay the highest property taxes in the nation. How do our seniors on fixed incomes stay in their homes? How do our young people who've gone away to college come back and find a place to live when everything is single-family zoning and there are no apartments?"

Gov. Kathy Hochul removed accessory dwelling unit and transit-oriented development legislation from the next fiscal year's state budget after opposition to the plans swelled.

Local officials who spoke after Hochul's removal of the items from the budget, said they want to work with the state but the plan that was offered was the wrong approach.

Mount Kisco Mayor Gina Picinich said all sides need to take a step back and do the hard work such as analyzing whether communities that have laws that create more ADUs are more affordable. Mount Kisco, for example, does not have ADU legislation, but is one of the more affordable communities in the area.

She agreed with nearly all of her local colleagues that because of unique sets of variables in each community a one-size-fits-all approach was the wrong strategy to employ.

"I greatly appreciate Sen. Harckham who has been an advocate for reducing housing costs for a very long time," Picinich said. "But we need a broader coalition. Folks just sitting in Albany, we cannot expect for them to have the answers and we need a broader coalition."

North Castle Supervisor Michael Schiliro, who was perhaps the most outspoken official against the legislation, said he was pleased the ADU and TOD measures were pulled from the budget, although they could remain as standalone bills. He urged residents to continue to write their state representatives to make sure that the legislation

Schiliro said he would support a task force that includes all stakeholders to see how more affordable housing can be realized without ceding local control. The decision-making process has to remain with local officials because they have the knowledge about what would work regarding concerns about the environment, parking, strain on emergency services and schools, he said.

Similar to many towns, North Castle has had accessory dwelling unit regulations on its books since 1984, that has produced more than 80 units. The town approved creation of middle-income units in the mid-1990s and adopted an affordable housing ordinance in 2014.

"We're happy to be part of the solution but this (legislation) was a problem and you can see how fervently people pushed back... in what they are trying to do because we support those efforts, but it was how they were trying to do it and one size cannot fit all," Schiliro said.

Assemblyman Chris Burdick (D-Bedford) recommended the state provide incentives for towns to revise their zoning that increases the number of units in their communities but leave the review to the municipalities. A model ordinance drawn up by the state that communities can tailor to their needs, similar to what Westchester County did in the aftermath of the affordable housing settlement, could also work, he said.

However, proponents of the legislation said until a real commitment is made to increase the housing stock that is more affordable, New York will continue to have a housing affordability crisis.

Michael Romita, president and CEO of the Westchester County Association, the county's largest business organization, said there is the danger of businesses leaving the area because people want to live near where they work. If too many potential employees leave, then businesses leave and it could threaten economic stagnation, which leads to higher taxes.

State Sen. Peter Harckham's plan to increase housing affordability was dealt a major setback last week after the governor took it out of the budget.

He said there needs to be some state involvement because local control hasn't solved the housing problems facing Westchester. New York lags most other coastal states with strong economies in addressing state-level zoning regulations to ensure housing stock diversity, Romita contended.

He suggested looking at a Massachusetts law that provides an appeals process if a project is rejected, so there isn't unfettered local discretion. Other states require multifamily housing zones as of right, but if a project builds in a certain threshold of affordability, then the municipality doesn't have to comply with the law.

"If people have an opportunity to vote their values, they will generally vote in favor of inclusive zoning laws," Romita said. "But when they're faced with developments in their backyard, obviously things change and they come out against it. That's exactly the kind of issue that requires a state-level approach."

Moses Gates, vice president of housing and neighborhood planning for the Regional Plan Association, said despite last week's disappointment, he's hopeful the recent debate initiates a dialogue that leads to meaningful solutions.

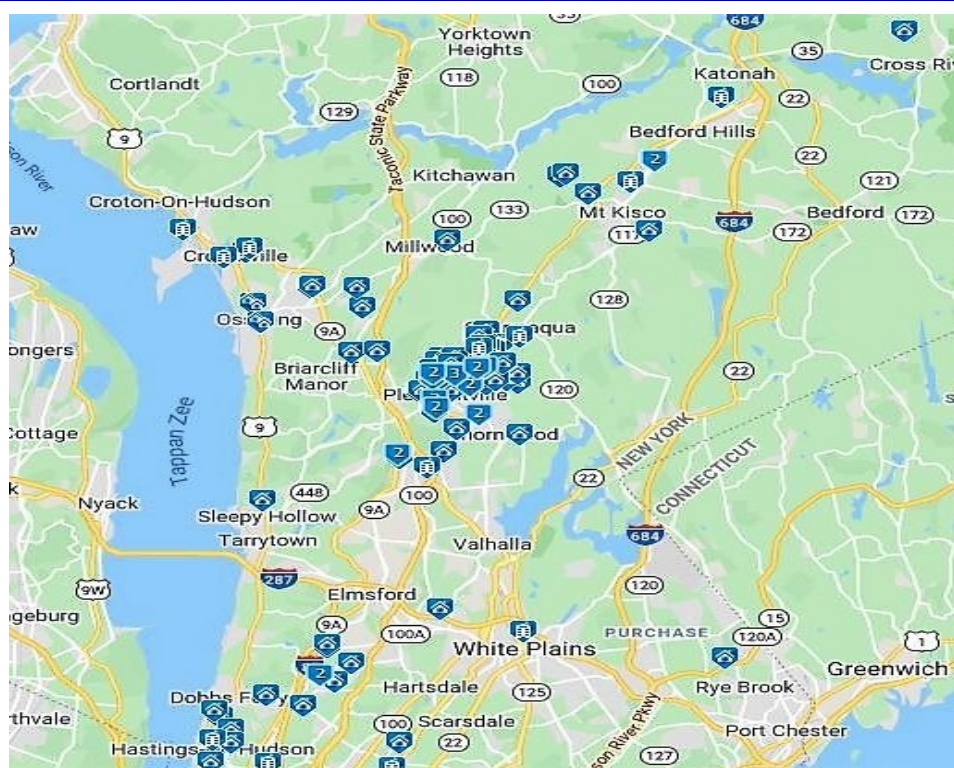

"The region's housing shortage is not going away and will likely worsen," Gates said. "Patterns of residential segregation will remain stubbornly locked in place until we intentionally address them. We look forward to working with lawmakers and our coalition members to continue expanding housing choice and create a more equitable and prosperous region that works for everyone."

Bedford Schools Hire Eastchester Superintendent to Lead District

By Martin Wilbur

The Bedford Board of Education announced last Wednesday that it has selected its next superintendent.

Dr. Robert J. Glass, who is currently leading the Eastchester School District, is expected to take over the helm from Dr. Joel Adelberg July 1. Adelberg announced his retirement last year, effective June 30.

"Our decision was guided by the leadership profile that was created from the results of community and staff forums, focus groups and a community survey, and we believe Rob is a great fit for Bedford," said Board President John Boucher.

Contract negotiations with Glass have yet to be completed, according to the board.

In Eastchester, he oversaw a successful bond referendum and worked with the community on a strategic vision for future teaching and learning.

Before arriving in Eastchester, Glass served for nine years as superintendent of Bloomfield Hills Schools in suburban Detroit and was named Michigan Superintendent of the Year in 2017 by that state's Association of School Administrators. While there, he engaged the community to build consensus around the design and construction of an innovative high school model. Glass also supported staff development around diversity, equity and inclusion.

He began his career as a fourth- and fifth-grade teacher before becoming an elementary school principal and an executive director of instruction.

The board selected Glass after a national search, assisted by educational consultant and search firm Hazard, Young, Attea Associates.

"Guided by the community's input at the onset of the search process, it was clear that our next leader needed to have a strong track record of success in developing a vision, unifying all stakeholders in developing strategic planning and inspiring academic success across an array of interests," said Board Vice President Ed Reder.

"Throughout our interviews, Dr. Glass continually impressed the board with his leadership traits, past success, and thoughtful manner in bringing together each community he has served," he added.

The board will introduce Glass to community in the coming months.

Dr. Robert Glass will become the Bedford Central School District's next superintendent, the Board of Education announced last Wednesday.

Byram Hills Board of Education to Fill Vacancy on March 8

By Martin Wilbur

The Byram Hills Board of Education will select an interim board member at its Mar. 8 meeting after it met and briefly interviewed two candidates last week for the vacant seat.

Residents Melissa Jacobs and Gwen Torre each read roughly five-minute statements and answered several questions from the board.

Jacobs and Torre both have a background in education, have had children in the district and have volunteered in different capacities in the community.

After starting her career as a second-grade teacher in Pleasantville, Jacobs said she has worked as a substitute teacher in various districts throughout Westchester. She has also served on the Byram Hills Education Foundation and has been involved in all of the district's schools as a parent.

She said her professional experience and familiarity with the school district would be an asset to the board and would help in continuing the high standards that are synonymous with Byram Hills.

"I would love the opportunity to support Byram Hills' continued emphasis on academic excellence and rigor while also addressing students social and emotional growth," Jacobs said. "I believe we need to continue to hire and retain the superlative teachers and principals that my sons have experienced, individuals who are truly experienced in our students' education and who are a vital part of our learning community."

Torre started her teaching career in Staten Island, where she was raised, and also taught in Queens and districts throughout Westchester. She has also volunteered as a board member for the Crohn's & Colitis Foundation.

"I would like to learn and contribute to the educational future of my own community using some of the skill sets that I have already built over the years," she said.

The vacancy was created at the end of last year following the resignation of longtime board member Ira Schulman, who was elected North Castle town justice. The appointed board member would serve until the May 17 election.

Rainey Kicks Off Campaign for Assembly; Levenberg Unveils Ad

95th Assembly District Race Update

By Rick Pezzullo

Former Peekskill mayor Andre Rainey formally kicked off his campaign for the 95th Assembly District at a rally in downtown Peekskill.

Rainey, who served two terms as mayor before opting not to run for re-election last year, told a crowd of supporters on Feb. 12 about the need for affordable housing and protections against evictions as he talked about his family's struggles.

"I come from a struggling family. Both of my parents can share their stories. We know what it's like just getting by," said Rainey, a single father of three children. "When you had to be reminded Christmas was about religion and family, not only because it is but because that helps remove the expectation of lots of Christmas gifts, we've been there. We couldn't always afford it."

"Whether a veteran, a single parent in hard times or a person who's had a rough time making ends meet, we need to stand with them," Rainey said. "We need funding and resources for health care in all forms. The cost of rent rises, taxes rise, and yet, salaries just can't seem to keep up. This makes it harder and harder for us to live. And I can assure you, get me up to Albany and I won't just fight for this, but I'll do the work."

Former Peekskill mayor Andre Rainey officially kicked off his campaign for the 95th Assembly District seat recently while Ossining Supervisor Dana Levenberg debuted a new campaign ad last week. They are two of the four Democrats vying for the party's nomination and to succeed Assemblywoman Sandy Galef.

Rainey is one of four Democrats to date to throw his hat in the ring to succeed retiring Assemblywoman Sandy Galef.

The other candidates who have announced their intentions are Westchester County Legislator Colin Smith, Ossining Supervisor Dana Levenberg and former Peekskill councilwoman Vanessa Agudelo.

Rainey mentioned his strategy for prevailing in the June 28 Democratic primary, where the victor is expected to win the seat in the November general election.

"I will canvass neighborhoods that have not always seen leaders at their door. I will work to support local candidates for office, because change starts from the bottom up," Rainey said. "I will bring attention to the issues that our constituents want us to face head on. After serving the City of Peekskill for six years, I feel that it has become part of my family. I believe that, as I run outreach into Ossining, Cortlandt, Yorktown, Cold Spring, Philipstown and each corner of the 95th, that I will learn much from you, as you get to know me."

Meanwhile, released a new campaign ad last week that lays out her priorities, qualifications and readiness to serve.

In the video ad, Levenberg stressed her years of fighting for safer and more equitable schools, gun safety, marriage equality, environmental sustainability and environmental justice, a woman's right to choose, fair and affordable housing and taxpayer fairness.

"After almost 30 years of exemplary service from Sandy Galef, the residents of the 95th Assembly District expect an assemblymember who is prepared to serve our communities well on day one," Levenberg stated. "They deserve a lawmaker who will lead the way on issues like protecting taxpayers, ensuring a bright future for our children, and safeguarding our environment for generations to come. I am that leader and I am eager to make my case to the voters as I ask for their vote."

Raymond Nuytkens

Raymond Nuytkens, of Jupiter, Fla. and formerly of Pleasantville, passed away peacefully on Feb. 1 after 96 years of a beautiful life well lived.

He leaves his beloved wife of 69 years, Carol Haight Nuytkens; his son, Peter Nuytkens, and his wife, Margaret, of Franklin, Mass.; daughter Pamela Davis Pagano and her husband, Vince, of Jupiter, Fla.; five grandsons; one granddaughter; and two great-grandchildren.

Ray was born on Oct. 21, 1925, in Gerritsen Beach, Brooklyn, son of a Belgian father and French mother. A World War II veteran, he served in the infantry in France and Germany and took part in the liberation of the Dachau concentration camp. When he and his platoon traveled through France, it was bitter cold and many men suffered frostbite, but not Ray. He used the tapdancing skills he learned as a youth to keep from freezing while standing watch.

When he returned from the war, he enrolled at Pratt Institute where he met the love of his life, Caro. They both graduated with degrees in interior design. They moved from Brooklyn to Pleasantville where they designed and built their dream house in the modernist style of Frank Lloyd Wright on a hillside, blasting away rock that they used to create beautiful stone walls lining the 32 steps to the front door. Their welcoming living room, a favorite gathering place for family and friends, was striking with its wall of floor-to-ceiling windows looking out on their beautiful view of trees, rocks and lush carpets of moss where they enjoyed watching the birds and squirrels for more than 50 years. He will always be remembered by his grandchildren for his fastidious vacuuming of the moss!

Ray commuted into New York City for 36 years, working in retail store planning and design. He was vice president of Bonwit Teller and finished his career as vice president of Hambrecht Terrell International where he designed stores for Saks Fifth Avenue, Bloomingdales, FAO Schwarz and Marshall Fields, as well as other stores around the world including in London, Asia and Australia.

Raymond Nuytkens

He continued his long family tradition of sailing, buying an Ensign sailboat when his children were very young, and naming it for them, The Peter-Pam, with a nod to eternal youth. It was the center of many family adventures as he sailed it for more than 40 years on Long Island Sound.

He and Carol loved ballroom dancing and were always the first on the dance floor; the Rainbow Room at Rockefeller Center was a particular favorite. They also loved swimming and riding the waves at East Hampton and cross-country and downhill skiing in New York and Vermont. He was a fitness buff and loved to walk – at a pace that was tough for most everyone to keep up with!

Ray was active in the Chappaqua Congregational Church where he was committed to giving back by serving others. Always an optimist with a zest for life, his most frequent conversational remark in his last months was, “It’s been a good life, so what the hell!”

A Celebration of Life service is being planned for the spring or early summer.

Margaret Cullen

Margaret Ahern Cullen, 90, died peacefully at home on Feb. 17, fortified and anointed by the sacraments, surrounded by her loving family.

She was predeceased by her husband, John Robert; their infant daughters, Catherine and Roberta; and her brother, the Rev. Monsignor Thomas Ahern.

Marge was born Sept. 3, 1931, to Thomas Paul and Margaret (Elliott) Ahern in San Francisco, and graduated from Lone Mountain College for Women with a degree in Early Childhood Education. As a college student, Marge worked summers at Yosemite National Park; she always had a great love for travel and the outdoors.

She married her lifelong love, Bob, in 1954, and taught elementary school until their first child was born. When Bob’s work took them cross country to New York, they embraced the change and the challenge. After their three girls were older, she returned to teaching, as a reading specialist and a nursery school teacher.

For 19 years she served as a teacher’s aide at Westorchard Elementary School in Chappaqua, supporting teachers and students across all grades as well as in the art program. Her kindness, compassion and humor touched the hearts of her colleagues and enriched the lives of hundreds of children.

Marge also worked at the Chappaqua Public Library for over 20 years, stopping only due to the pandemic at age 88. She found so much enjoyment in all the latest books and films, and the companionship of the library staff and in interactions with the public.

Marge was a concert-trained pianist and loved sharing music with family and friends, accompanying singalongs and Christmas carols. She was also an extraordinary seamstress, sewing holiday dresses for her girls, suits for herself, bathrobes for Bob and elaborate ball gowns and other costumes for theatrical productions. A creative healthy cook, Marge discovered brown rice years before most; her carrot pudding and blueberry tart were legendary.

She served as a Girl Scout leader, and was game for camping out with her daughters’ troops.

Marge hosted inner-city children for summers in Chappaqua under the auspices of the Fresh Air Fund. She was known for welcoming all to her table – visiting priests, lonely friends and assorted children.

Along with Bob, Marge was very active in the Church of Saint John & Saint Mary in Chappaqua as a eucharistic minister, Sunday school teacher and member of the Women’s Auxiliary. She also devoted decades of service to the Rosary Altar Society.

In September, friends celebrated her 90th birthday pandemic-style with a 40-car parade around the Chappaqua train station, kindly led by the New Castle police.

Marge is survived by her sister, Mary Dean, brother Paul Ahern (Stephanie) and many wonderful nieces and nephews and their children. She also leaves her daughters Mary Zorich (Michael), Patricia and Teresa Bueti (Sandy) and her grandchildren Timothy Zorich (Melody), Regina Sparks (Michael), Serafino, Gianina and Paul Bueti.

Marge’s kindness and love for family, music and children will live on in all who knew her. She taught by example what it means to live a principled life.

A memorial Mass was celebrated at the Church of Saint John & Saint Mary in Chappaqua on Feb. 21. A Celebration of Life will be held outdoors in the spring. As the spouse of a veteran, Marge will join Bob and their two daughters in the Golden Gate National Cemetery in San Francisco.

In Marge’s memory, donations may be made to the Cancer Institute at Northern Westchester Hospital, Northwell Health (<https://give.northwell.edu/support-us>) or The Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary Church (www.assumptiontruckee.com) in Truckee, Calif.

Students to Be Disciplined in Somers for Noose Incident

By Rick Pezzullo

An undisclosed number of students are facing disciplinary action for an incident involving a noose at Somers Middle School last week.

In a message to parents, Somers Middle School Principal Jeffrey Getman stated on Feb. 16 that a student brought to school an approximately four-foot piece of quarter-inch rope that was tied into a noose. A teacher learned of the rope, confiscated it and reported the matter to school administrators.

Getman stated an investigation by administrators, the school resource officer and members of the threat assessment team concluded the student did not pose a threat to other students.

“At no time was the rope used to threaten or harm other students,” Getman stated.

However, Getman stated students involved would be subject to discipline in accordance with the Student Code of Conduct.

Getman advised parents to tell their children to speak out if they come across any item they feel does not belong in school.

“By working together, we will ensure that Somers schools remain a safe environment for everyone,” Getman said.

Woman Killed in Condo Fire at Heritage Hills in Somers

A 70-year-old woman was killed in a fire that broke out in a Heritage Hills condominium in Somers last Wednesday afternoon.

The Somers Fire Department was dispatched to 973 Heritage Hills on the West Hill for a structure fire at 4:11 p.m. on Feb. 16. There were reports from neighbors of two people trapped inside.

Due to the conditions of the fire, a thorough search of the residence was delayed as mutual aid was provided by more than a dozen area fire departments.

The two-alarm fire was brought under control at about 6 p.m. and fully extinguished by 11 p.m. The blaze was contained to two residential units.

The woman was the sole occupant of the unit and was found dead by firefighters. Her identity has not been released.

New York State police are conducting an investigation. The official cause of the fire is undetermined.

Philipstown Gas Station Robber Nabbed By Authorities

By Rick Pezzullo

A parolee who robbed a Philipstown gas station at gunpoint was arrested last week by the Putnam County Sheriff’s office in Newburgh five days after the incident.

Police apprehended David M. Peres, 23, of Newburgh after he attempted to flee police, but was quickly taken into custody.

According to Putnam County Sheriff Kevin McConville, on Feb. 13 the department received a call for a robbery in progress at the Gulf gas station at 1122 Route 9D in Philipstown.

The suspect had entered the store, displayed a handgun and proceeded to zip-tie the clerk’s hands at gunpoint. Sheriff’s deputies on patrol immediately responded to the scene and were assisted by the Putnam County Sheriff’s Bureau of Criminal Investigations, Crime Scene Unit and Narcotics Unit, the Cold Spring Police Department and the New York State Police.

Upon arrival, the suspect had already left the area in a vehicle in an unknown direction.

The sheriff’s Crime Scene Unit processed the scene, while other members of law enforcement scoured the area for witnesses and clues. As the investigation was pursued, various leads were followed which, led to the identification of the vehicle and the suspect.

On Feb. 18, the sheriff’s office teamed up with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the City of Newburgh Police Department and Town of New Windsor police to apprehend Peres, who failed in his attempt to flee the scene.

After consultation with law enforcement authorities, it was determined Peres would be federally prosecuted.

Peres was turned over to U.S. marshals in White Plains for arraignment before a federal judge.

With Housing Bills Out of the Budget, Now Comes the Difficult Part

Over the past month there was a groundswell of opposition to two pieces of legislation that were surreptitiously included in the upcoming fiscal year's Executive Budget.

The Accessory Dwelling Unit (ADU) bill, which had been introduced last year by state Sen. Peter Harckham, and Gov. Kathy Hochul's own addition, a Transit-Oriented Development (TOD) proposal, ignited a firestorm of backlash. Some of the criticism was warranted.

The ADU plan would have given residential property owners the right to build an accessory unit if they wanted with far fewer restrictions than what most municipalities currently have on the books. The TOD proposal would have allowed 25 residential units per acre within a half-mile radius of a train station, an unsustainable idea no matter how pro-affordable housing one may be.

At least residents and municipal officials had a heads-up last year with Harckham's plan, if they were paying attention, since he introduced it in 2021 through conventional legislative channels. The same cannot be said of the TOD bill, which blindsided most people in the state.

Last Thursday evening, Gov. Kathy Hochul correctly removed them from her budget so those proposals – or others – can be properly debated.

However misguided it was for Hochul to stick them in her proposed budget, it had one very positive effect, intentional or not. It jumpstarted a regionwide, if not statewide, conversation on the need for more housing for those who don't earn a six-figure salary but are a vital cog in the local economy and community.

For too long, policymakers at all levels have ignored the spiraling costs of housing in the Hudson Valley and throughout the metropolitan area, seemingly forgetful that you need people who pick up the garbage, work at the delis and diners, provide daycare for kids and many other tasks society takes for granted until no one's there to do them.

There was hope that after Westchester County complied with the affordable housing settlement a little more than five years ago, that a model was in place to gradually start closing the gap between supply and demand. A good-faith effort was put forth by many of the county's municipalities by passing some form of Westchester's model ordinance that required 10 percent affordable units for subdivisions.

What is now evident since Westchester met the settlement's deadline is just how woefully deficient it has been. In 2004, a housing needs assessment from Rutgers University revealed a need for about 10,700 additional units. Fifteen years later the next assessment showed the need grew to 11,703. And Westchester is just one of 62 counties in New York.

There is no shortage of ideas out there that aren't the ADU or TOD proposals. Many local officials still want local control, which when exercised responsibly is fine. But local control can't be a euphemism for no.

Some have suggested a state task force to explore the range of possibilities. That could be a good place to start. Other states have enacted meaningful legislation that is not the draconian elimination of single-family housing seen in communities in California. A review of sensible policies elsewhere should be undertaken. Incentives can be offered.

Perhaps one possibility is for the state to require that each county, based on its population and needs assessment, make headway to reduce its affordable housing shortfall. For those communities within a county that have developed more affordable units and ADUs already, their share could be proportionately lower based on their population and what has been developed.

Whatever solutions emerge, this challenge must be viewed as a shared responsibility by all communities, not as punishment. Everyone has a stake in having a well-rounded, diverse community – with diversity not just being racial but economic, white collar and blue collar and generational as well.

Otherwise, don't complain if there's no one to prepare your burger deluxe at the diner one day.

Time to Move Forward With a New Carmel Master Plan and Show Vision

Okay, the honeymoon for the new Master Plan project is over. Carmel cannot afford to wait any longer.

Supervisor Mike Cazzari said that "decisive leadership is what is called for." To be fair, he has been in office nearly eight weeks and he has a lot on his plate. But a word on what the status of the new plan is would be helpful.

I know he is a huge fan of this project as he told me during his campaign. We are tired of Suzy McDonough's answers "soon, very soon." She is the head of the task force, and as such, has responsibility to communicate to the public what the status is.

The vision is fading at Town Hall. The chamber white paper was called Carmel Vision to call forward dreams. From my task force sources, the Nelson group is dragging their feet! They were paid more than $100,000 of taxpayer money and I, along with other townspeople, are tired of it. Bad business. No accountability. Inferior performance.

A draft of the Master Plan has been on the town's website since October. There was no communication of this, and except for my sharing it with a group of concerned voters, I do not believe there has been any announcement to the public to review it or encourage any conversations. Once more the criticism that the town does not know how to effectively communicate with the public rears its head.

It has been five years since presenting this to the Town Board. Enough already. Even with a pandemic, we should be further down the road. Like the movie "Network," it is time for all to go to a Town Hall meeting and yell "I am mad as hell and I'm not going to take this anymore."

You are probably thinking "I told you so, this town never follows through." I cannot do this alone and do not expect chamber leadership to step up to the task. So, I am releasing this project to you, the public. Continue putting up with high taxes, how the town looks and no growth of this municipality or start holding the Town Board accountable.

I leave you with Supervisor Cazzari's words after he was sworn in: "We have all these great ideas, but it's been all talk and nothing ever seems to get done with these long-winded politicians." Contact him at 845-628-1500 or msc@ci.carmel.ny.us and let him know your thoughts. He needs your support to unclog the process.

Chappaqua's Buttonhook Development Would Desecrate Sacred Site

This column was written and submitted by Victoria Alzapiedi, Tracey Bilski, Kate Brady, Hermian Charles, Bill Connors, Haley Ferraro, Stacy & Robert Morgan, Maxine Margo Rubin, Cristina Shih and Lynn Trotta on behalf of Friends of Buttonhook.

There is about to be a decision on whether to issue a key stormwater permit for six luxury homes that would be built atop a sacred Native American ceremonial stone complex that was recently discovered deep in the woods in Chappaqua.

The permit application is in front of New York City's Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) that is responsible for protecting the city's watershed and reservoirs.

Multiple Native American tribes have made clear that this stone complex is of the highest spiritual and cultural value. It has been the location of rituals throughout the year for hundreds, if not thousands, of years before the tribal communities were driven off this land. Native American researchers and an archeology team have declared this a sacred site of critical historical significance and one that should be studied and preserved.

Native American descendants view this location as uniquely important and irreplaceable. The indigenous peoples who walked the lands of modern-day Chappaqua hold a deep understanding of the value of keeping this complex intact. For them, this area is tantamount to what we would understand as a church, synagogue or mosque today. It is precious and irreplaceable. Destroying a site of such spiritual meaning would be yet another traumatic assault on their people and their heritage and there are not many intact complex areas like this left. Losing it would be tragic, and some have argued as horrific as the treatment that Native Americans have historically endured when driven from their homes in this town.

Today, we speak out to prevent another chapter of cultural erasure.

Unfortunately, the city isn't concerned with protecting and preserving the Native American history recently discovered in this forest if it issues a permit without full consideration of impact to these vital resources.

The DEP is currently evaluating the stormwater permit application submitted by the developer and owner of this land, the Chappaqua Central School District. This permit would be another critical step toward final approval before the New Castle Planning Board for the development of this 20.3-acre forest – a surplus parcel of land owned by the district called the Buttonhook/Zauderer site.

The stormwater permit will result in negative impacts to this ceremonial complex and to the spiritual meaning of the site that is closely tied to the water and the ecology of this land. We urge further study that the impact the stormwater permit would have and a full consideration of the long-term implications of such a permit to make this land buildable. That requires ongoing operation and maintenance obligations left to a homeowners' association with no guarantees of proper maintenance.

The stormwater permit is meant to address and protect sensitive streams in the city's watershed on both sides of this forest that cascade into the Croton Reservoir. But this housing plan would bring known and unknown changes to water and to its spiritual value demonstrated by the Native Americans' marking of this site with ceremonial stone engravings centuries ago.

The Buttonhook land, as it now sits, is a stunningly beautiful expansive and untouched rocky hilltop forest with steep slopes. The housing plan also calls for the clear-cutting of 676 trees and forested woodlands – currently a rich, untouched and unspoiled wildlife habitat for bobcats, coyotes, foxes, owls, hawks, countless songbirds, mammals and beneficial insects who call this forest their home. They will all be displaced if these trees are clear-cut – at a time when expansive woodland wildlife habitats of this type are increasingly difficult to find here in New Castle.

As New Castle residents, we are today's land stewards with a responsibility to respect and honor the Indigenous people who were the first caretakers of this land. We hope the city and the New Castle Planning Board will be on the right side of history and take a thorough and cautious approach to fully understand what is at stake and to prevent the needless desecration of this sacred site in our forest.

As an ever-increasing group of concerned citizens, currently more than 50 people, we want to offer to the Chappaqua School District an alternative – to make it possible for them to withdraw their plan to develop this area and to consider the benefits to the district, the community and to the invaluable spiritual and historical value of this land, instead of selling for development of the Buttonhook forest.

There are viable and common-sense alternatives, like a purchase of this land so it can be turned over to a nonprofit organization to be preserved as open space in perpetuity. To that end, an effort is underway to help raise funds to purchase the Buttonhook land from the district. For more information, visit www.preservebuttonhook.org or contact us at PreserveButtonhook@gmail.com.

Please join us in this time sensitive effort to better understand, to appreciate, and most importantly, to save this sacred forest.

If We Teach Our Kids One Thing, Let it Be Respect

The nature of discourse at school board meetings across the country has devolved into pandemonium. And this month, it crept into our backyard.

Things got particularly nasty last week when a Lakeland parent, who is Black, attempted to address the Diversity, Equity & Inclusion (DEI) curriculum proposals of the budget at a Board of Education meeting. He was literally shouted down by other parents with phrases like, "we're not trying to live in Harlem," and "we don't want diversity."

After the meeting, racial slurs were hurled at the superintendent and one of her Black colleagues. She even had to be escorted home by police because she was being followed by the agitators.

This isn't how we should behave toward one another as neighbors, and it certainly isn't the example we should be setting for our children.

In the land of the free and the home of the brave, how can we accept this behavior as a community? It harkens back to a time when persons of color needed National Guard escorts just to attend school. We cannot and will not allow ourselves to be drawn backward in time. We have come too far and sacrificed too much.

I am relieved to report that at last Thursday night's board meeting, which I attended, many came out in support of the melting pot we call home. I'm proud of our school leaders who, against all odds, have maintained their own decorum even while under attack. I'm proud of the students who stood up and spoke against bigotry and hate, and did so from the heart. And I'm proud of Michael Lillis, president of the Lakeland Federation of Teachers, who may have said it best: "Sunlight is the best antiseptic" for ignorance, intolerance and hatred.

Indeed, last Thursday night, the Lakeland community lit up that darkness with tolerance, equity and love.

We must draw the line at hatred and bigotry and continue building on the progress we have made. We must remain laser-focused on providing the best possible education for our children. And we must come together and show our children that everyone deserves to be treated with dignity and respect.

If we fail at that as a society, we've got bigger problems than masks.

Correction

Last week's article regarding the updated mask rules at the Pleasantville School District may have been unclear. Superintendent of Schools Dr. Tina DeSa said that currently the district will continue to practice a mitigation strategy that will require a daily health screening; enhanced ventilation and cleaning and disinfection; weekly surveillance testing; contact tracing and quarantining protocols; and universal masking for all students and staff regardless of vaccination status while indoors, on a bus or in the locker rooms.

The Examiner regrets any misunderstanding as a result of the article.

Inspired by Tevye, Local Actor Brings His Own Story Home

By Martin Wilbur

Bruce Sabath had previously sung in the sanctuary of Temple Shaaray Tefila, where he is a member, but it's always been during a major Jewish holiday or for Saturday morning services.

On Thursday, Mar. 3, he will be performing something different in a benefit for the synagogue that hits close to home for him and likely for much of the audience.

Sabath, who has Broadway, Off-Broadway and television credits on his resume, will be doing his one-man show "Searching for Tevye" based on his journey that started as a theater-loving kid growing up in Rochester, continued to Harvard and through a decade-plus career working on Wall Street before making the transition to follow his dream and try to make it as an actor.

As a child, Sabath was well-acquainted with the show "Fiddler on the Roof," and at about 10 years old the movie was released. It also didn't hurt that one of his grandfathers was a dairyman in his native Ukraine, just like Tevye, the lead character in 'Fiddler.'

"So when I became a professional actor after coming back to acting after being in finance and corporate business, Tevye was sort of this idea," explained Sabath who made his Broadway debut in 2006 in Stephen Sondheim's "Company," which won a Tony Award the following year for Best Revival.

Katonah actor Bruce Sabath, who has appeared on Broadway, Off-Broadway and on television, will be bringing a performance of his one-man show, "Searching for Tevye," to Temple Shaaray Tefila in Bedford on Mar. 3.

"That was a role that I really wanted to play, that I had a strong connection to as well as my own family background."

Before the pandemic struck, Sabath had been performing the acclaimed "Fiddler on the Roof in Yiddish" when he was asked to come to the Rochester JCC by an artistic director of a theater there to do a talk-back and Q&A with the audience about his path to acting and his various 'Fiddler' roles. Soon after in March 2020 everything shut down and it was during that time that Sabath got the notion to expand his personal story into a one-man show that would become "Searching for Tevye."

Last November, he was performing it at the New York City nightclub Don't Tell Momma when fellow members of Temple Shaaray Tefila were in attendance and appealed to Sabath to do a performance for the congregation. The show is also open to the general public.

Sabath's production will include a three-piece band – a piano, bass and violin – under the direction of Ben Kiley, who was the assistant conductor of "Fiddler on the Roof in Yiddish." For those looking to attend, there's an option for to buy tickets to pre-show reception with small bites by Matt Miller Events and a tasting by local wine specialist Bill Tisherman of Wine For All, who will pair wines for the occasion. The performance will be live-streamed.

"I'm really blessed to be able to bring this piece to my fellow congregants, my friends at Shaaray Tefila," Sabath said. "I've sung many times over the years at services both on Shabbat and High Holiday services at various times. So I'm very familiar with singing for this group of people, but it's really kind of special to be able to bring my own story and bring it here and be able to do it for people I know so well."

For those attending, wearing a mask and proof of vaccination will be required. The performance starts at 8 p.m. For tickets and additional information, visit www.shaaraytefila.org.

"With their genuine hospitality, I felt as if I was really celebrating my mother's beautiful life, not mourning a loss. Without them, the process would have been so much more stressful."

Sin embargo, el votante militar debe entregar su solicitud original de papeleta militar y su papeleta militar por correo o en persona. La Secretaria del Distrito transmitirá la papeleta militar del votante militar usando el método de transmisión que prefiera el votante militar. Las papeletas de voto en ausencia, incluidas las papeletas de voto en ausencia de militares, deben recibirse en la oficina de la Secretaria del Distrito a más tardar a las 5:00 p.m. del 29 de marzo de 2022.

Habrà disponible una lista de todas las personas a las que se enviaron papeletas para voto en ausencia en la oficina de la Secretaria del Distrito durante su horario regular de atención, hasta el día de la votación. Todos los votantes calificados pueden impugnar la aceptación de la papeleta de cualquier persona de la lista, manifestando su impugnación y los motivos de la misma a la Secretaria del Distrito antes de que cierren los centros de votación.

Registration Open for Tri County Science and Technology Fair

The 2022 Virtual Tri County Science & Technology Fair has begun accepting registrations for its regional science competition.

This valuable STEM event is organized by The Putnam Children's Discovery Center Inc., with Pepsi Global R&D as grand sponsor. Held every year, the fair provides hundreds of students across a wide spectrum of diverse backgrounds an opportunity to have their voices heard and their research shown.

Join students such as Ishana Kumar, who won first place at the virtual 2020 Tri County Fair and the prestigious Samuelli Foundation Prize – $25,000 at the Broadcom Masters competition. Or Irene Basu who won first place in biology at Tri County and earned Top 300 at Broadcom 2020.

Tri County has proudly seen students continue to Top 300 at Broadcom Masters, a national middle school competition. The Lemelson Early Inventor Prize, sponsored by The Lemelson Foundation, is also obtainable by participating at the Tri County Fair. At the high school level, four of the best entrants are sent, and every year students place at the New York State Science Congress.

The fair has not missed a year since its inception 36 years ago. Janice Newman, a former Putnam County resident, wanted to give back to the community and decided to start the first county-wide fair in Putnam. The grassroots effort had no major corporations in the county. Today, the fair has a corporate sponsorship from Pepsi Global R&D, as well as matched employee donations and private donations from businesses and the public.

The Discovery Center is able to accept stock donations as well as cash. The Putnam Children's Discovery Center is a 501(c)(3) nonprofit organization and qualifies for matching grants and tax-deductible contributions. Donations can be made by sending checks to PCDC at P.O. Box 222, Carmel, N.Y. 10512. Electronic donations can be made through PayPal at paypal.com/us/fundraiser/charity/1565662 or Square at putnam-childrens-discovery-center-inc.square.site. The Putnam Children's Discovery Center is also registered with Benevity.

"This year we are even better prepared to provide our fair virtually again," Newman said. "Nothing can match the warmth of engaging with our students in person, so we look forward to resuming in-person fairs, afterschool programming and much more in the coming years as the pandemic hopefully winds down.

"This year the fair is virtual, and we are extremely proud of the dedicated participants, judges and volunteers that help make the Tri-County Science and Technology Fair the only regional science fair in New York State that includes elementary school."

The fair is open to private and public school students in grades K-12 in Westchester, Rockland and Putnam counties. Homeschooled students may also participate.

The fair has the following project categories: biology; chemistry; clinical/social psychology; Earth/space, engineering/technology; environment, health and nutrition; math/computers; medicine and medical science and technology; physics, psychology; and physiological/experimental psychology.

The fair could not take place without volunteer judges with expertise in the aforementioned categories. Scientists, retired science teachers and college students are welcome to judge. Visit sites.google.com/view/virtual-pcdctcsf/home if you are interested in judging.

If you are a science teacher, principal or interested parent, visit www.DiscoveryCtr.org.

A Barry Funny Guy

Humor columnist and author Dave Barry dishes about life in his native Westchester and beyond.

Armonk native Dave Barry knows funny. In fact, it's his job. The humorist wrote a weekly column for the Miami Herald for more than 20 years, with his wit and prose earning him a Pulitzer in 1988. Barry has since published more than 30 books and even had a sitcom based on his life.

Examiner+ caught up with Barry to discuss life in Westchester, his fond memories of "Barmonk," and his one and only humor column he wrote for the Pleasantville High School newspaper.

Examiner+: What was it like to grow up in Westchester County?

Dave Barry: Well, it was good for me. I grew up, and this was millions of years ago, in Armonk. The town I was born and raised in was just a little village then. It was the best of both worlds because we were a little town. Literally, everybody knew everybody. So, the kids could run free and we knew everybody we saw on the street. But also we were 30 miles from New York. We could get to White Plains and get the train to "the big city." So we thought we were sophisticated, but we lived this bucolic, happy life — the kids did, anyway, in Armonk. I have really good memories of that time.

It's really different now. I'm sure that somebody's having a good time in Armonk as we speak, but whoever that is has way more money than anybody when I was there. The people who lived literally on my street; one guy was an advertising executive, one was a Nestle executive. But also, there was a carpenter, a plumber, a guy who ran a stationery store — let's say, regular blue-collar people. I don't think there's a lot of that in Armonk anymore. It's become a high-end, pony town. And I'm sure there are a lot of wonderful people there, but it's not what it was when I grew up.

E+: You attended Pleasantville High School and you wrote humor columns for the school newspaper. What were people's reactions to your columns?

DB: Well, first of all, I think I only wrote one because the editor of the paper was a friend of mine named Tom Parker, who only became the editor of the paper so that he could put it on his application for college, which worked. He got into Yale. But he didn't really didn't do it out of a passion for journalism.

I wrote a column that I thought was hilarious, and I honestly don't remember if anybody else did, or if anybody even read it. I do remember what it was about. The senior boys had a tradition: back then we would go to a field and drink a bunch of beer — which I want to stress is illegal and young people should never do this — and then play football. It was called, "Load Ball," and it was just a ridiculous drunken running-around, falling-down thing.

But I wrote an account of the Load Ball game as though it was a real sporting event for the Pleasantville High School paper. I can't remember anything else about it other than a, I thought it was hilarious, and b, as far as I know, nobody but me read it. Certainly, nobody in the administration at Pleasantville High School was even vaguely aware of what it was about. I imagine everybody who could punish me is by now dead. so I'm glad I got that ...

The Ongoing Search for Far-Off Planets in Our Skies

Last December, NASA and the Jet Propulsion Laboratory (NASA/JPL) launched the James Webb Space Telescope (JWST). Many people see Webb as the much-more-powerful successor to NASA/JPL's Hubble Space Telescope.

For more than 30 years, Hubble has driven our understanding of the universe and given us an endless supply of desktop background photos. It's incredible to think what we might learn once the JWST is fully up and running.

One of the JWST team's goals is to expand the ongoing hunt for exoplanets, planets that orbit stars other than our sun. Astronomers have always imagined planets at other stars, but first identified possible exoplanets in 1988. In 1992, they confirmed the first. According to Extrasolar Planets Encyclopaedia, there are now close to 5,000 confirmed planets at other stars, some near, some far, some in multi-planet systems.

Most of these planets' host stars are too faint or distant for us to see without specialized equipment, and seeing the exoplanets themselves is simply out of the question. They're just too small and their parents' starlight is too bright and washes them out.

That doesn't mean we can't explore a little on our own. Two naked-eye stars that astronomers believe have exoplanets are easy for us to see in the evenings this month.

First, let's find our old friend Orion. He's in the southern part of the sky in the evenings. Let's draw a line through his three belt stars and toward the west. That's, generally, toward the left. The bright red star we'll come to along that line is Aldebaran, the brightest in Taurus, the bull. It's about 65 light years away. There's some doubt, but astronomers believe there is a star about five times the size of Jupiter orbiting Aldebaran at about 1.5 times the distance earth orbits the sun.

Next, let's draw a line from Rigel, at Orion's right foot, through Betelgeuse at his left shoulder. Continuing that line, we'll come to Castor and Pollux, which represent Gemini, the mythological twins. Pollux, about 35 light years away, is the brighter of the pair.

In 2006, the astronomer Artie Hatzes confirmed the existence of a planet about twice the size of Jupiter there. It's since been named Thestias, for Pollux's son. Like Aldebaran's planet, Thestias also orbits Pollux at about 1.5 times the distance we travel around the sun.

We can't see these planets from our neighborhoods, but at times like these it's always fun to try to imagine the scene as though we could; as though we're closer to it. To help us out a bit, the moon slides past Aldebaran on Mar. 8 and Mar.

9. Then a few days later, it teams up with Pollux on Mar. 12-13.

Imagine seeing the moon drifting across the sky above us. As it does, our gaze stretches off into the galaxy, where we'll see planets orbiting these stars, as well as countless others.

Our lives, and the vastness of the galaxy can be overwhelming. It's hard to know what we're looking at sometimes. I find great comfort, though, in looking up on a clear night and wondering who's looking back with their space telescopes. Maybe they're wondering who's out there, too.

I hope you'll take a look, and wave, too, this month.

Scott Levine (astroscott@yahoo.com) is an astronomy writer and speaker from Croton-on-Hudson. He is also a member of the Westchester Amateur Astronomers, who are dedicated to astronomy outreach in our area. # A Stone By Any Other Name: Of Scone, or Innisfail, or Pretender?

More than a few things bond Ireland and Scotland, as more than a few articles in this column have suggested. A common indigenous tongue, a fierce sense of pride, dedication to the memory of a dethroned Stuart monarch, a love for lost causes and a stone. Yes, a stone.

Stones seem to loom large in Celtic myths and legends. Standing stones, arranged in rings, with mystical powers for those “in the know,” dot the landscape of both countries. To this day they are given acclaim for the miraculous.

But there is one stone in particular that claims pride of place, especially in Scotland. That is the “Stone of Scone,” upon which Scotland’s kings were crowned for over a thousand years. It has a storied past and a turbulent history.

Who was the first recognized King of Scotland? Why, none other than an Irishman, Fergus Mac Erc! At the turn of the sixth century, he ruled the kingdom of Dalriada, which spanned portions of Ulster in Ireland and Argyll in Scotland. And to seal the occasion, he “borrowed” a sizable piece of the Lia Fáil, a rock embedded atop Ireland’s Hill of Tara. It was there that each High King of Ireland was enthroned.

By Brian McGowan

Also known as the “Stone of Innisfail,” the Lia Fáil was part of a meteorite that fell from the sky eons ago, in times with no written record. Ironically, it actually fell in Scotland, from where it was taken to Ireland by a prehistoric, pre-Celtic race, the Tuatha de Danaan, eventually ending up on the Hill of Tara. One of the stone’s mystical attributes was the ability to roar with delight when a chieftain worthy of the title was crowned. Conversely, when someone less than worthy stepped up, the stone would cry with dismay.

Fergus’s reign was short. He was king for only three years, and died in 501 C.E. A long line of kings descended from him and expanded their power throughout Scotland.

Each of them accepted the honor while seated upon the rock that Fergus had “borrowed” from the Hill of Tara, and planted in Scotland’s soil.

Enter the English King Edward I. In one of England’s many campaigns to subjugate her neighbors to the north, in 1296 he stole the stone, by then ensconced at Scone Abbey, in Perthshire, and brought it back to London. There it has lain under the Coronation Chair that every British monarch has sat upon as they were crowned, the last being the current monarch, Queen Elizabeth II. Talk about a foe being ground underfoot!

Many efforts were made over time to bring the stone back to its rightful owners, the Scots. Or would that be the Irish? Regardless, it wasn’t until 1950 that justice was served, if only temporarily. Some enterprising Scottish students stole the stone from Westminster Abbey and carried it back to Scotland. It took four months for the stone to be returned to the authorities, and it was quickly whisked back to London.

Since 1996, 700 years after its original theft, the stone was officially restored to Scotland. It can only be brought back to London on the occasion of the coronation of the next British monarch, after which it returns north, to Scotland.

But a mystery emerges. The Stone of Innisfail, the original in Ireland, is a piece of a meteorite. The Stone of Scone is a block of sandstone, quite different. Some speculate that the enterprising Scots duped Edward I. They substituted an impostor stone, and then buried the real one somewhere about the abbey, its location now lost in the mists of time.

Perhaps someone knows the secret of the stone’s whereabouts, and is waiting for the right moment to reveal it, given Scotland’s progressive move closer to declaring independence from Great Britain. Maybe a Stuart “heir presumptive” awaits, ready to ascend Scotland’s ancient throne.

Who are the Stuarts? Gist for a future

Westminster Abbey’s Coronation Chair, with the purloined Stone of Scone secured beneath it.

Celebrating the Birth of the Father of Our Country

By Nick Antonaccio

Every once in a while, a seemingly obscure news clip inspires me as a theme for a wine column. On the occasion of the 290th anniversary of the birth of George Washington, I've decided to reprise a column I penned in 2012 that had a tie-in to the alcoholic beverage of choice of the father of our country and his compatriots.

An ice bucket, commissioned by Gen. Washington, garnered an astronomical price of $782,500 at auction. What was the significance of this objet d'art that it became such an objet du désir?

As I researched it, I realized that this ice bucket embodied a number of compelling aspects of American history.

1. It was designed by Father George himself to his specific dimensions and construction, but he wanted it to be austere in appearance; no British aristocratic trappings.

2. It was used extensively at Washington's home for entertaining.

3. It was presented by Washington at the end of his term to his long-time friend and collaborator, Alexander Hamilton, whose direct descendants offered it for auction.

I began to consider this wine cooler as it might have pertained to the drinking habits and preferences of our Founding Fathers. After all, they were of Puritanical heritage, and likely did not tipple. Why a need for a wine cooler during such temperate times?

In fact, the Founding Fathers and their contemporaries were not teetotalers. They seemed to have quite a propensity for all things alcoholic. Their annual per capita consumption was five gallons (nearly twice as much as we consume today). What were they drinking? Apparently, anything they could purchase or home-produce to satisfy their voracious appetite for alcohol.

By way of example, I came across a document recounting an outing of Father George, Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin and the other Founding Fathers as they were crafting the Constitution. After a particularly stressful day of negotiations and drafting, the 55 delegates gathered at a local tavern to unwind. The tavern's records, surviving to this day, detailed the bar tab for the evening's festivities. Here is how I envision the evening may have unfolded (the anecdotal dialogue highlights factual history):

George: "Barkeep, bring us your finest beer and cider for these fine patriots."

The night progresses.

George: "Barkeep, although it is my drink of choice, I'm tired of beer. I brew my own, which I consume each evening with dinner. Bring out the good stuff. Don't you have any hard liquor?"

Barkeep: "I just received a shipment of Madeira wine from Portugal. It's all the rage in New York. Fortified and sweet, I can't get enough to satisfy my customers' changing palate."

George: "Bring it on, my good man, I know it well. I pour it at home, utilizing my personally designed bucket at the conclusion of each evening's dinner."

Later that evening, George to Ben: "See if you can convince Jefferson to fetch a few bottles of that fine French wine he brought back from his government boondoggle to France last year."

Ben to Thom: "What do you say, my fellow lover of all things French? You've been saving those expensive Bordeaux wines for a special occasion. Does forming our own citizens' government and creating our own laws and civil rights qualify?"

Thom: "I don't mind, but I'm concerned about you Ben. I know your motto – everything to excess."

Ben: "Alright then. Tonight, it's all about moderation. Just as our government is turning over a new leaf, so will I."

At the end of the night, the bill is presented: 54 bottles of Madeira, 60 bottles of claret wine, eight of whiskey, 22 of porter, eight of hard cider, 12 of beer and seven bowls of alcoholic punch.

Two bottles of wine plus one bottle of various other alcohols – per delegate? Coincidentally, two days later, the Constitution is formally signed.

My, my. I have a new admiration for Father George. Who knew his talent for raising his arm to lead his loyal troops into battle was equally suited for a toast to the leaders of the Spirit(s) of 1776?
