Fox-Alter Reflects on Career at Pleasantville Schools

By Abby Luby

As Pleasantville School District Superintendent Mary Fox-Alter was plowing through countless stacks of files on her office conference table, she was trying to decide what she should keep or discard.

Her official retirement date was still a week away and the decades of files represented hard copies of just some of her institutional knowledge, keys to the previous and current educational landscape.

Fox-Alter has been Pleasantville’s superintendent of schools for 11 years, completing a 32-year tenure in the district. She previously served as the district’s technology coordinator and deputy superintendent before she was tapped to lead the district.

Her college education was a unique blend of courses that would prepare her to steer K-12 education from the 20th into the 21st century, with undergraduate degrees in history and secondary education. She also holds a masters in educational technology. Knowing how to program, she easily connected the dots between technology and education.

“At that time, I wondered why technology was in the realm of just computer scientists and engineers and how it could become an everyday tool needed by everyone,” Fox-Alter said. “If I could bridge both worlds, wouldn’t that serve education?”

Fox-Alter said understanding data is a crucial skill for students to acquire before finishing high school. As the education world embraced the digital universe, Fox-Alter saw it as revolutionary.

“I firmly believe all students, when they graduate, need hard skills and soft skills,” she explained. “Soft skills are liberal arts, creativity, writing, poetry, theater, acting, singing. But you need those hard skills – math and science – to know how technology works and how it impacts your daily life.”

Like any superintendent, Fox-Alter has had her share of challenges throughout her tenure. But none are as impactful as the loss of a student to a drunk driver, through the death of a student.

Tenure. But none are as impactful as the loss of a student to a drunk driver, through the death of a student. The Mount Kisco Village Board is weighing the loss of a student to a drunk driver, through the death of a student.

The losses in Pleasantville prompted the school district to take an active role in caring for bereaved students, teachers and families. It demonstrated a need to create a compassionate circle of care consisting of professionals who can support families and students learning how to deal with the different stages of grief, Fox-Alter said.

“I have learned to wake up every day and be appreciative of this community here, the students, my family, my husband and son. That’s what those experiences of loss (have) taught me,” she said.

Mount Kisco Weighs Certified Translator for Meetings

By Martin Wilbur

The Mount Kisco Village Board is exploring whether to retain a certified translator to provide audio of its meetings in Spanish or continue using a bilingual village employee to deliver the service.

Last week board members discussed those choices and also mentioned possibly closed captions could be translated into a streaming service through YouTube so those choices and also mentioned possibly closed captions could be translated into a streaming service through YouTube.

Mount Kisco, Modell’s Agree on Tax Assessment Deal

By Martin Wilbur

The owner of another prominent property in Mount Kisco has reached a settlement with the village to significantly reduce their assessment and receive a refund from the village, the Bedford School District and Westchester County.

SL Mount Kisco LLC, one of three entities listed as the owners of the property vacated by Modell’s that also owned the now-defunct sporting goods chain, will receive a refund of $33,802 from the local government covering a five-year period from 2016 through 2021 after challenging the village’s assessment earlier this year in state Supreme Court. Roughly half of the 21,155-square-foot retail building at 154 Main St. is still occupied by Modell’s, pictured here before it went out of business last year, will receive more than $178,000 in tax refunds from Mount Kisco, the Bedford School District and Westchester County.

generated heated and opposing viewpoints on masking and vaccinations. For Fox-Alter, dealing with rising controversies required having a deeper understanding of people.

“The human experience is fragile and we’re hit with so many different challenges right now,” she said. “And sometimes individuals’ ability to absorb all of that and go about their daily lives – there’s only so much capacity in the human spirit. It helps to approach it (with) a level of kindness and recognition, which is always important. It’s even more important now.”

Moving beyond pandemic-induced controversies meant having respectful dialogue.

“It’s the ability to navigate those conversations during difficult periods of time and understand one another in terms of a shared vocabulary,” Fox-Alter explained. “Individuals are trying to improve the quality of life for everyone and people of good intention can accomplish a great deal. Having conversations in a respectful manner, trying to understand perspectives, having warm reactions and cool reactions might be a way.”

During Fox-Alter’s stewardship, the district introduced Dialectical Behavior Therapy (DBT) that teaches students to handle emotions, understand mindfulness and develop interpersonal skills.

“I certainly think what we’ve learned from our DBT skills, our social and emotional contact learning has taught us a great deal about human interaction and how to have those conversations in public over topics where people have different perspectives,” she said.

Explaining how funding for public education works has been one of Fox-Alter’s challenges, especially regarding the tax cap, the limit a district can add to its tax levy from year to year. The tax cap isn’t really understood because “it’s complicated and so murky and that doesn’t help,” she said.

The district has been successful in keeping taxes under control. Fox-Alter said proactive planning for the short and long term rather than reactive planning is essential.

“We need to have a deep understanding of the multiple funding sources,” Fox-Alter said. “Property owners pay an inordinately high level of property taxes and I understand, appreciate and respect that.”

But districts can be hit with state requirements and mandates that drive costs outside of officials’ control, forcing schools to be pressed against the cap.

“You might go to state officials and say ‘Well I’m under the tax cap, but this new cost is here’ and the response we get is ‘Did you go to the limit of your tax cap?’ We say ‘No. I want to stay fiscally responsible to my community.’”

The question Fox-Alter has found herself asking state officials is why should districts max out their tax cap in hopes of getting the state to then pick up the cost of new mandates.

She is a strong proponent of a cost analysis of the impact of new state requirements on schools. There are multiple organizations prepared to do that including the Educational Economic Conference Board, the New York State Council of Superintendents and the New York State School Boards Association.

“We would be more than happy to sit down with anyone and go through what the fiscal impacts of any proposed bill would be,” Fox-Alter said. “That might help people voting on it to understand its potential impact. How do you have a strong debate over a pending bill that could impact schools if the fiscal impact isn’t looked at and discussed.”

Leaving the district in sound fiscal condition while academic excellence has been maintained is reassuring to Fox-Alter. There is also plenty of opportunity for improvement, she said. Integral to growing and improving a school district is the community.

Maintaining all the professional relationships she established when she started as a teacher to when she became superintendent never suggested any change in approach. Rather it emphasized essential teamwork.

“All positions I’ve held had their challenges, joys and rewards,” she said. “However, the one constant is an uncompromising focus on educational excellence, and realizing that it’s a journey. But if you’re on that journey by yourself, you’re not going to go far. If you want to go fast, go alone. If you want to go far, go with a team.”

Fox-Alter is keeping an open mind about her future.

“I’m a faith-based person. I certainly think that God’s not done with me yet. I don’t know what the next journey will be but I am looking at a number of different options and choices. I do know I want to play a role in education in a different way, but a way that clearly advocates for kids.”

that and their career goals are defined to accomplish that,” Pataño said.

With most of Mount Kisco’s Spanish speaking population from Central America, there are also different dialects and cultural differences that a professional translator would be aware of than simply being fluent in the language, she added.

Trustee Anne Bianchi agreed that there is a need for a certified translator, which she described as “critical.”

Mount Kisco is officially 42 percent Hispanic, according to the 2020 census, and there is a likelihood the percentage may be higher than that.

Pincich said the Bedford School District uses closed captioning on the rebroadcast of its Board of Education meetings online but does not provide translation live. She was unable to find any Westchester municipalities that bring live Spanish translation to its meetings, although Pincich said she would be happy for Mount Kisco to be the first.

Pataño said that she was speaking with someone from California who mentioned that their home community has had live translation of municipal meetings for years.

Given the village’s demographics, it would be beneficial for Mount Kisco to consider the same.

“It’s about equity and once everybody can feel that they’ve heard and everybody can understand, then things move better in the community and I just think it’s a benefit to everybody,” Pataño said. “So I do think it’s very urgent, but I also want to understand the financial implications because I know that our community is very interested in that as well.”

Party City.

The school district will be forced to give back $102,345 and the county $22,243. The Village Board approved the settlement on Dec. 20.

“We never like to give money back but this is one of the situations where we have to calculate what’s the best way to approach this,” said Mayor Gina Pincich.

Village Attorney Whitney Singleton said that Mount Kisco reached a settlement with the three limited liability companies that Mount Kisco bankrupt in 2011.

Public間に Whitley Singleton said that Mount Kisco reached a settlement with the three limited liability companies that Mount Kisco bankrupt in 2011.

Singleton said that the value is frozen at the new negotiated level until the owner makes a major change to the property or is able to have at least another 25 percent of the building occupied. If one of those scenarios occurs, then the village would be allowed to reassess the property, he said.

“The problem is you don’t want to be stuck at that $4.3 million value going forward,” he said. “However, as you can tell by the current occupancy, the building is only about 50 percent occupied.”

Modell’s paid $6.25 million for the property at auction prior to its 2016 move into the space. The same location on the corner of Green Street had been empty for about five years after another chain retail business, the old Borders bookstore, went bankrupt in 2011.

In his letter earlier this month to the Village Board, Assessor Roger Miller called the settlement “reasonable.”

“In our opinion this settlement is reasonable and favorable to a potential trial, given market conditions and the specifics of this property,” Miller stated.

“Retail rental rates have declined and the vacant space at this property is larger than typical and more difficult to lease than smaller spaces. We will be able to review and potentially increase the assessment when the building is re-leased.”

In September, the Village Board approved a settlement with the Mount Kisco Country Club for the portion of its land within the village.

In that matter, the village had to pay $88,435 in tax refunds to the golf club, spanning from 2017 to 2021.

WINE OF THE YEAR
2020 Anne Pichon Grenache Noir

Take what you think you know about Grenache and throw it out the window. As this wine opens, initial dark berry flavors meld into a true jam flavor with floral notes and bitter cranberry. It has such a divine, full mouthfeel that tricks you into not initially noticing that it’s more ‘dry’ than not. While there a lot of wines that showcase the best flavors of their region, Anne Pichon Grenache Noir did it best this year. Cheers!

Mt. Pleasant Schools to Convene Public Forum as COVID-19 Fears Persist

By Martin Wilbur

Mount Pleasant school officials are arranging a community forum with elected officials at every level of government after several parents recently expressed concern that COVID-19 vaccines might be mandated for children to attend school.

Superintendent of Schools Dr. Peter Giarizzo said the district, possibly in partnership with the Valhalla School District, is hoping to hold a public session sometime in January on education-related matters.

State Sen. Peter Harckham (D-Lewisboro) has sent a letter to Gov. Kathy Hochul calling on the state to open a mobile testing site at Franklin D. Roosevelt State Park in Yorktown Heights to help fight the latest spike in COVID-19 cases.

Harckham’s letter comes after Hochul announced that the state plans to open more state-run testing sites to combat the surge. However, as of Sunday there were still no state-run testing sites in the lower Hudson Valley.

“As we continue to fight this pandemic, we need to utilize all of the resources and tools available to us, and we know that testing is a crucial component in stopping the spread,” Harckham said. “I urge the governor to promptly open a site in the Hudson Valley region and recommend utilizing FDR State Park as a testing site. It’s large enough to easily accommodate a drive-thru testing site, and it’s easily accessible off the Taconic State Parkway and Route 202.”

Last week Westchester County Executive George Latimer announced that he planned to request the state use the County Center in White Plains and Glen Island Park in New Rochelle as possible sites.

Harckham Calls for COVID-19 Testing Site at FDR Park in Yorktown

One parent pointed to legislation introduced in October by Assemblyman Jeffrey Dinowitz (D-Bronx), whose bill would require every student to be immunized against COVID-19, adding it to the list of other vaccines mandated by the state for children to attend school, and vowed to fight any mandate.

Two parents who spoke on the issue during the Mount Pleasant Board of Education’s last meeting on Dec. 15 said they were looking for the government to continue to allow them to make the choice for what is best for their children and family.

“If we can get them here as soon as possible and we can get all of their support and no matter which way you choose, but that’s what we’re looking for; a choice,” said resident Carlo Valente. “That’s all we’re asking for.”

Giarizzo said Mount Pleasant will steer clear of any vaccine mandate for the school community.

“There is no mandate and we do not intend to impose one for either our staff or our students,” he said. “We will not. As (Board of Education) President Horan has stated, parents can make these informed decisions with their pediatricians and health care professionals.”

Another parent, Lauren Stanco, said she fears that with the recent surge in COVID-19 cases, the situation could result in a switch back to remote learning, which has occurred in several districts before the holiday break in the region.

“It’s such a concern for these kids. They’ve lived through this,” Stanco said. “I feel like it’s March again, two years ago. How much of this can we avoid shutting down again.”

One step that the district has taken is its “test to stay” program, which started the week of Dec. 13 and has saved 647 student school days across the district, Giarizzo said. The program provides a rapid test before the start of the school day to unvaccinated students who have been exposed to COVID-19.

Each exposed student must be tested for a seven-day period. If they test negative, they can stay in school, if not they are sent home.

Parents must fill out a consent form in advance to allow their children to be tested, which is found on the district’s website.

The purpose of program is to keep schools open, the superintendent said, and with the cooperation of parents and the hard work of staff, it’s been going well.

“My job is to keep kids in school,” Giarizzo said. “Our principals and administrators and the board (are) very committed to make sure that happens. We have not discussed any kind of extended closure. Honestly, that is like the last resort for me.”
Westchester Increases Testing as COVID-19 Cases Explode

By Martin Wilbur

As active COVID-19 cases soar to pandemic highs, Westchester County is increasing its testing for residents who show symptoms or have been exposed to someone who has tested positive for the virus.

County Executive George Latimer said Monday that Westchester is partnering with Quadrant Biosciences to make free PCR tests available at the County Center in White Plains for those who most urgently need to learn whether they are positive. Testing will begin this Wednesday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and continue on Thursday from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Testing will then resume on weekdays starting next Monday, Jan. 3 from 12 to 4 p.m. then continue from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. each weekday through at least Jan. 11. Appointments are mandatory and can be made up to three days in advance at www.westchestergov.com/health.

“The demand for testing will exceed the supply of tests nationwide,” Latimer said. “No matter what system you’re looking at the demand has far exceeded the supply of tests nationwide.”

The announcement came after Latimer, who along with Deputy County Executive Ken Jenkins returned to work after their own bouts with COVID-19, presented the explosive rate at which the virus is spreading. As of Sunday, Westchester had 16,819 active cases, easily eclipsing the high of more than 12,000 in the early stages of the pandemic in spring 2020. Last winter’s surge, which peaked on Jan. 18, saw more than 11,500 active cases.

On Nov. 26, there were 2,078 cases. On that same day, the infection rate was 2 percent; on Sunday it reached 13.7 percent in Westchester while New York State saw a 16 percent positivity rate. Within the last week infections in the county more than doubled.

While hospitalizations and fatalities are not rising at the same rate as active cases, they have still quadrupled during the past month. On Nov. 24, the day before Thanksgiving, there were 50 COVID-19-related hospitalizations, while on Christmas Eve that number stood at 214.

There were seven deaths from COVID-19 in the month ending with Thanksgiving. Between Thanksgiving and Christmas there were 30 fatalities in the county.

Latimer did not have the latest statistics on how many unvaccinated people accounted for the latest deaths and hospitalizations, but up until the latest surge about two-thirds of those totals consisted of the unvaccinated, he said. Some of the vaccinated in those situations also have had other health issues or may not have received at least two shots.

“What we do seem to see is that those people that have been vaccinated properly, either at the two-(shot) level or at the booster level, still may get the disease but don’t suffer seriously, do not wind up being hospitalized because of the disease,” Latimer said. “So to that extent we’re somewhat encouraged, but to go up from 50 hospitalizations to 214, that number has been rising each day this week. That is of great concern to us.”

In the early weeks of the pandemic, there were about 600 hospitalizations. Last winter that number rose to more than 500.

There have been 94 percent of adults 18 years old and up in Westchester who have received at least one dose. The rate of those with two doses is at 84 percent. The county did not have the numbers on the percentage or residents who received boosters or pediatric vaccinations.

Latimer urged residents to remain vigilant, wear masks in indoor public spaces and get vaccinated or boosted.

“We have the opportunity, if we show proper discipline, if we show proper perseverance to get through this,” Latimer said. “We can have our kids in class and get the proper learning. We can continue to function without shutting down the government, without shutting down the business community, which has happened.”

Rivera Toyota Approved to Upgrade Dealership, Build New Service Shop

By Martin Wilbur

Approvals were granted earlier this month to Rivera Toyota to renovate the existing dealership and build a new service and repair shop at the site of a former burger restaurant in Mount Kisco.

The village’s Planning Board voted in favor of site plan approval and to issue a special use permit to upgrade the existing dealership building at 325 N. Bedford Rd. to allow continued car sales and create 12 vehicle service bays, customer service accommodations and employee and administrative space.

Customer sales and display will be in the front of the building while the service area will occur at the rear entrance.

At the same meeting on Dec. 14, the board also approved the site plan and a special use permit along with a steep slopes permit to allow the auto group, which is owned by former Yankees great Mariano Rivera, to build a 12,672-square-foot, two-story service and repair shop at 353 N. Bedford Rd. It will house eight service bays, a customer drop-off area, customer service areas, and interior parts storage and will be for more routine service and repairs.

Representatives for Rivera Toyota have stated that if any patrons’ vehicles need to be taken to the repair and service location at 325 N. Bedford Rd. it will be done by employees to avoid worsening an often-congested roadway. There will also be appointment times when car owners will need to report to the site so there isn’t overflow at the site.

The current structure, which housed the Westchester Burger Co. before it went out of business on about a .8-acre parcel, will be demolished.

The approvals at the two sites will enable the auto group to relinquish its current service operations at 255 Kisco Ave. when the lease ends sometime in 2023.

The Hilb Group announced recently that it has welcomed Charles Newman Co. Insurance and Employee Benefits to its portfolio, adding to the company’s growing presence in the New York metropolitan area. The transaction became effective Dec. 1.

Based in Peekskill, Charles Newman Co. is a licensed full-service broker providing clients with a broad array of products and offerings including group health as well as ancillary and voluntary employee benefits coverage. Charles Newman, Ilana Arbeit, David Arbeit and their team of insurance professionals will join the Hilb Group’s tristate regional operations.

“We are extremely excited to join the Hilb Group,” said Newman, the agency’s leader. “This partnership marks a tremendous step in not only allowing us to maintain the strength of our local connections, but also to further enhance the resources and offerings we can deliver to our customers, now and for the future.”

The Hilb Group is a leading property and casualty and employee benefits insurance brokerage and advisory firm headquartered in Richmond, Va. It is a portfolio company of The Carlyle Group, a global investment firm. The company has completed more than 120 acquisitions and now has over 100 offices in 22 states.
Shimsky to Challenge Fellow Democrat Abinanti for Assembly Seat

By Martin Wilbur

Five-term Westchester County Legislator MaryJane Shimsky plans to challenge veteran Assemblyman Tom Abinanti in a Democratic primary next year after announcing her candidacy last Tuesday for the 92nd Assembly District seat.

Shimsky, the Board of Legislators’ current majority leader, said she enjoys being a legislator and hopes to carry that to the state level. The Dobbs Ferry resident was unopposed for a sixth two-year term last month but cannot serve beyond that because of Westchester’s law that limits county legislators to 12 years in office.

“Obviously, I have two years to find new employment, but I think being a legislator is far and away the most rewarding thing I’ve ever done,” Shimsky said. “You get to help people as individuals who call your office, you get to affect policy by doing legislative oversight on the executive branch and, as needed, you get to pass laws that improve your jurisdiction, whether it’s your county or your state.”

Her candidacy sets up a primary in June against Abinanti. The district has been a Democratic stronghold for decades. Before Abinanti took over in 2011, Richard Brodsky represented the area for nearly a decade as a state senator before running for the U.S. Senate. He lost a general election to Republican John McCain.

Brodsky, a Yale graduate, represented the area for nearly 30 years and is a county executive who went on to become a county legislator. He said former county executive Rob Astorino opted for what was called the Reconnaissance Plan a few years later, which has since become outdated. Meanwhile, she and other county lawmakers never followed up with a plan to deal with stormwater, Abinanti said.

“She’s running for a district that hasn’t altered significantly once redistricting is complete. “We don’t even know what the districts are,” said Abinanti, a Pleasantville resident. “She’s running for a district that hasn’t even been designed yet.”

Petitioning is scheduled to begin around Mar. 1. Neither candidate has heard yet of other potential hopefuls from either major party who might consider a run.

For Abinanti, this would be the second consecutive election cycle where he would be challenged by a fellow party member. Last year, Abinanti won a fifth Assembly term in November without opposition.

For Abinanti, this would be the second consecutive election cycle where he would have to fend off a challenge within his own party. In 2020, he outlasted little-known Jennifer Williams in the Democratic primary before winning a fifth Assembly term in November without opposition.

Stepinac Alum Donates $1M to Alma Mater; Largest Gift Ever for School

Daniel P. Mahoney, a distinguished 1967 graduate and longtime supporter of Stepinac High School, recently returned with his wife, Susan, to donate to his alma mater that he credits for shaping his success as well as many other students.

This time, his commitment to Stepinac came as a $1 million gift, the single largest donation in the 73-year history of the renowned all-boys Catholic high school.

In recognition of the significance that the contribution will make in supporting the school’s mission to provide students with the skills they’ll need to be globally competitive, the groundbreaking Honors Academy will be renamed the Susan and Daniel P. Mahoney Honors Academy.

Launched four years ago, the Honors Academy, which Mahoney praised for its curriculum innovation, is a small learning program for academically top performing students that provides college-level applications in four disciplines – engineering, finance, health sciences and law – leading to potential careers.

The Mahoneys, who now live in Jupiter, Fla., were longtime Rye residents where they became pillars of that community. Susan Mahoney served on the Board of Trustees of Rye Country Day School for 14 years and was responsible for leading three major fundraising campaigns.

"On behalf of our truly grateful Stepinac family, especially the students, I extend deep appreciation for your very generous gift," said Stepinac President Fr. Thomas Collins while recently accepting the couple’s gift. "It truly reflects your abiding faith in the school’s tradition of shaping tomorrow’s leaders. Thanks to your investment, you will help assure that Stepinac remains strong as a preeminent leader in secondary education."

After graduating in 1971 from Boston College where he majored in finance, Dan Mahoney pursued a successful career spanning more than 30 years on Wall Street as a New York Stock Exchange specialist. He served as a senior partner at CMJ Partners, a leading New York Stock Exchange member firm.

Time to Polish the Crystal Ball and See What’s in Store for 2022

It’s hard to believe that it’s time to turn the page on another year. After the upheaval of 2020, it’s likely most of us were looking for a better outlook in 2021. There were some hopeful signs, but it was still a difficult year for so many. For those of us who look forward to 2022 and hope that if just some of these wishes come true, we’ll be in a better place a year from now.

For all Americans who rely upon the irreplaceable assistance and services that so many rely upon.

To fill the empty storefronts in downtown business districts everywhere. For residents to shop local as much as possible to help all downtowns thrive.

For everyone to once again feel comfortable going to whatever store, restaurant or venue you choose to visit.

That all those who continue to stubbornly refuse to get vaccinated against the deadly COVID-19 virus come to their senses. For health care professionals, whose mission is to help others, receive the thanks they deserve.

That teachers and school personnel are recognized for their dedication in educating children in the midst of some of the most challenging times.

A wonderful retirement for Cortlandt Supervisor Linda Puglisi after 34 years of impeccable public service, including the last 30 as supervisor.

That Yorktown Councilman Vishnu Patel, a selfless public servant, continues to find a way to make his community better.

For Putnam Valley Supervisor Sam Oliverio, Carmel Supervisor Ken Schmitt, Somers Supervisor Rick Morrissey, Kent Supervisor Maureen Fleming, Peekskill Mayor Andre Rainey and all others leaving office, nothing but success in the next chapter of their lives. Thank you to all of you for your public service.

For those who will continue to serve, much success and wisdom.

Great memories for all youth and high school athletes. May you all experience the joy of victories. That all first-responders are told how much they are appreciated. Let them know whenever you get a chance.

A salute to all our readers and advertisers who have supported Examiner Media and our quest to continue delivering quality local journalism.

And a happy, healthy and prosperous 2022 for everyone.

Fighting Mask Mandate is Divisive and Helps No One

I read with interest your article last week “Gubernatorial Hopeful Slams Mask Mandate But Reaction is Varied.” It would be nice for the politicians to get on the same page regarding COVID-19, a benefit to us all.

The governor’s directive to businesses requiring proof of vaccination OR wearing a mask is not unreasonable in this recent spike of COVID-19 cases. Maybe you should speak with the Emergency Department nurses who have been dealing with COVID-19 every day for the past two years as I have. These health professionals are stressed out and worry daily about the consequences of bringing COVID-19 home to their families. Their wishes are simply wearing a mask to protect yourself and others and get vaccinated. Not really a big deal.

Shopping at BJ’s, Acme and Lowe’s in Yorktown a few times this past week, it does not appear that the long lines of mask-wearing shoppers are leaving these stores to shop in Putnam. In fact, BJ’s shares the same shopping plaza as All Seasons Wine & Spirits mentioned in your article. I am sure the same mask-wearing shoppers at BJ’s are patronizing nearby All Seasons Wine & Spirits without incident.

People are scared of the new COVID-19 variant. We can all get through this COVID-19 together, including our local businesses. The statement by Mr. Zeldin “...that there are people who are going to be taking their business to Putnam” is divisive and serves no one.

Personally, as a senior citizen, I am going to be even more cautious when I have to go out, double mask and continue to shop in Yorktown.

MaryEllen Odell, our county executive, has chosen this time to announce that Putnam County will not enforce the mask mandate that Gov. Hochul recently put in place. Not that it matters that much that Odell and the county legislature passed the resolution. Everywhere I go people are masked up. They don’t want to take a chance they will get COVID-19. Odell announced that the Health Department is arranging a private-public partnership to create a COVID testing site in Carmel that will be open six days a week.

They understand the gravity of the situation. Why, then, pass a resolution that opposes their own state government, does not help county residents deal with this deadly crisis and will obviously be ignored? The legislature argues that the government does not have the right to order people to wear masks. This is empty political grandstanding. This does not save lives!

As she sauntered into the conference room at Cortlandt Town Hall, a building that played a pivotal role in the beginning of her historic 30-year run as town supervisor, Linda Puglisi described the personal touches she made on decorating the space, along with the many scenic locations in town, some that were on display in photographs on the wall.

It was two weeks before Puglisi, 72, would be exiting Town Hall as the longest serving chief executive in Cortlandt history and only the second woman to lead the town after deciding a year ago to retire after 15 terms.

“I would love to be supervisor the rest of my life. In my mind it’s my identity. It’s who I am,” Puglisi said during a wide-ranging and sentimental interview. “I wanted to go out on my own terms. I have been blessed and fortunate to have had the trust of residents all these years. It makes me feel satisfied that I made a difference. That was my goal from the beginning.”

Born in Canton, Ohio, Puglisi moved with her family to Rockland County when she was two years old. Her father, Ralph C. Braden, was a World War II veteran who would later serve 25 years as town historian in Orangetown. He knew John E. Kennedy; someone Puglisi would grow up to admire.

She and her ex-husband, who she met as a freshman at Pearl River High School, bought a house in the Crospont section of Cortlandt to be closer to his job. Their twin children, Ali and Jeff, who grew up to be an attorney and a doctor, respectively.

Puglisi first became involved with issues in the Lakeland School District, who was president of the Mohegan Colony Homeowners Association and director of the Mohegan Colony Nursery School.

Puglisi also joined Cortlandt Watch, a homeowners’ group that promoted environmental protection and controlled development. That caught the eye of veteran town official Jack Gaffney, who was running for supervisor in 1987. Gaffney lost to his longtime nemesis, Charles DiGiacomo, but Puglisi and Thomas Carulli, his two running mates, defeated two prominent Republican candidates for Town Board seats.

“It was the right time for me to run for town council,” Puglisi said. “The community was going in a different direction. They wanted less development. I thought the whole team would win. Tom and I came out of that grassroots community.”

Two years later, Gaffney ousted DiGiacomo. Puglisi had toyed with running a Democratic primary against Gaffney, but decided to back off. But in 1991, she secured the Democratic line and prevailed in a four-way race by 83 votes, outlasting DiGiacomo, Gaffney and Alfred Donahue to win her first two-year term as supervisor.

“From Day One I wanted to be in charge. I didn’t like some of the decisions that were made. I felt I could do a better job,” Puglisi said. “I knew it was an uphill battle.”

During the campaign, Gaffney openly questioned Puglisi’s credentials, remarking, “Linda Puglisi is a nice lady who can serve milk and cookies and sing nursery rhymes, but she can’t run a business.”

“I think it backfired,” Puglisi said of Gaffney’s comments, which were echoed by others. “Sure, that was an outrageous thing to say. I wanted an opportunity. I went and marketed myself. I was pleased that people got my message, believed in me and supported me.”

Puglisi also benefitted from a backlash against Gaffney from Croton-on-Hudson residents, who were bitter that Cortlandt was moving its offices from the Croton Municipal Building, where the town paid about $100,000 annually in rent, to the former Van Cortlandville Elementary School Building, which the town purchased for $1.1 million in 1991 following a referendum. Ironically, it was Puglisi’s idea to pursue the building and she was part of a negotiating team that secured it.

The town spent another $500,000 to make necessary improvements that Puglisi played an integral role in redesigning.

“In the long run it would be beneficial to the village,” Puglisi said. “I always knew that this former elementary school recycled into a Town Hall would serve our community well and it has done just that for 29 years.”

Other economic-led decisions Puglisi spearheaded were eliminating the town police department in 1999, consolidating town operating departments and other shared services.

Of course, the hallmark of her career has been the town’s average annual tax increase of 1 percent. During the same time, Cortlandt has completed more than $160 million in major improvements and capital projects, while only utilizing 1.2 percent of its bonding capacity.

“It’s a record that we are very proud of which has benefited our community, residents and local businesses during this administration,” Puglisi said.

Puglisi also led the charge to retain veterans’ services at the Montrose VA and helped add 3,000 acres of open space that have been used for recreational purposes or environmental preservation.

“Politics can be difficult, but I had a plan. I had a mission,” she said. “All the innovative ideas were what were best for the community. I don’t regret anything.”

Along the way, Puglisi faced many challenges, from hurricanes and tornados to the sudden announcement that the Indian Point nuclear power plants, the largest employer in the town, would be closing. She said Indian Point “kind of took over my life from the beginning.”

However, she emphasized that nothing compared to the obstacles created by the COVID-19 pandemic. Fortunately, none of the town’s 200 employees have died from the virus.

Puglisi suffered a personal misstep in 2006 when she stepped in a pothole wearing high heels on her way to a function at Colonial Terrace where she was scheduled to introduce President Bill Clinton. She wound up getting five plates with screws in her ankle and has had to use a cane ever since.

“It changed my life. It was a stupid accident,” she said. “I’ve always been a very athletic person.”

Puglisi said she has extreme confidence that supervisor-elect Dr. Richard Becker will lead Cortlandt in the right direction.

“I know Richard will do a good job and carry forward a lot of our projects. I wanted to make sure someone would carry on the legacy,” Puglisi said. “I have confidence in Richard and the team that they will do the right thing.”

Puglisi said she has no plans to leave Cortlandt and hopes to catch up on some reading and do some traveling. She is fond of New England and enjoys being at the ocean. And, of course, she will spend more time with her children and two grandsons, Oliver and Jeremy.

“They are amazing and the light of my life,” Puglisi said. “I’m also just so proud of my kids. They’ve achieved a great deal. The most important thing is they are such good people.”

Don’t expect to see her speaking out at meetings, though. After leading more than 1,700 of them during her tenure, she’s been there, done that.

“I’ve had my turn. I’ve had my time,” Puglisi said. “I’ve worked to the best of my ability. It’s been exciting. It’s been interesting. Where can you have a profession where every day is different? I’ve met so many people that I wouldn’t have met before. Cortlandt has a bright future.”

Art, Music is the Heart and Soul of ‘Joshua2’

By Abby Luby

Maybe it’s how he soulfully sings the blues or deftly paints his large canvases or molds his uniquely shaped vessels. Each creation by artist and musician Joshua Brittingham seems to emanate directly from his soul, from an inner space informing him of a plethora of emotions unfolding from social inequities and worldwide painful discrimination to a transformative place of where negative vibes become positive. Brittingham’s art and music stays with you.

A tall, bespectacled man with a hearty laugh, Brittingham, 60, professionally goes by the name Joshua2, a name he gave himself after a traumatic, life-threatening experience prompted him to forgive his parents for naming him after his father. Brittingham and his wife, Holly, have two adult children. The couple moved to Somers five years ago after living in Harlem because he “needed to get closer to nature.”

As a youngster, Brittingham grew up steeped in the Pentecostal faith, singing gospel. “We were hard working Black people who worked in factories in what I call one step above the Great Migration from the south in the 1930s, ‘40s and ‘50s,” Brittingham recalled. “We knew this country was not good for us, was not going to help us, but we worked hard.”

Brittingham’s original paintings sell from $12,000 to $18,000 and giclée prints are priced at $750 to $4,500. Among his use of rich symbolism are thick encumbered nooses and wide-eyed crowned figures of Jesus and crosses. Many surfaces on the canvas are layered with pages of scripture. “It’s my way of denouncing the scriptures,” Brittingham explained. “If people really read the Bible, well, it’s not a happy book. My use of scripture pages means to warn people to really study and understand Christianity.”

Brittingham sees religion as a movement taking advantage of disparity. “You see big stone cathedrals all over the world in poor places, like in South Africa, a church that offers sanctuary to the poor,” he said. “But that big church is what keeps people poor.”

Not limiting his creativity to just two dimensions, Brittingham creates large, organically-shaped vessels, delicately leaning vases or lotus bowls, which all radiate a living presence, especially when you stand next to or hold one. Using recycled and repurposed glass bottles, he recreates the shape using reconstituted, hand-made paper made into a thick, textured pulp applied to the bottle, layered and painted.

As an accomplished performing musician Brittingham regularly sings with his band. They have performed in Harlem, Delaware and abroad in New Zealand, Germany and Amsterdam. Locally, he performs outside his Somers studio twice a year. His last concert in September welcomed visitors into his gallery.

Brittingham’s rock ‘n’ roll and blues songs may sound familiar but he often rewrites the lyrics to “tell the history of our people and credit those who actually wrote the words and composed the blues but died penniless in a little shack while others took credit and became famous.”

Brittingham has his own version of the song “Strange Fruit,” composed by Abel Meeropol and recorded by Billie Holiday in 1939 about lynchings. The song compares victims to fruit hanging from trees.

Whatever mode of expression Brittingham chooses, each is a commentary on religion, the current state of racial inequality and healing. As a leader of the Black student union while attending the University of Delaware, he recalled countless protests, being arrested, beaten and going to jail repeatedly. His take on the current Black Lives Matter movement is that it doesn’t go far enough.

“I appreciate what BLM is trying to do but it’s on the surface,” he said. “I want to change the laws still on the books that say discrimination is legal. There are still Jim Crow laws that say if you are 15 percent Black, then you are a Black person. We also need to change the laws that legally allow a person from lynching Black people,” he said, referring to the killing of Ahmaud Arbery, a Black man murdered by two white men in Georgia last year.

Currently Brittingham is embracing Taoism, incorporating symbols of the Eastern philosophy in his visual work.

“The Tao tells us about peace and love, and that’s what is missing in the scriptures,” he said. “My family were all healers and I create from the heart.”

5 Questions Women Should Ask About Breast Cancer Surgery

Q: What is my stage?

A: Breast cancer stages are represented on a scale of 0 to 4, with 4 being the most serious. Stage 0, also called ductal carcinoma in situ, means that your cancer is contained in a milk duct and has a low risk of spreading. Stage 4 breast cancer means the cancer has spread to other parts of your body. If your cancer is stage 4, seeking treatment immediately may improve your outcome and ultimate quality of life.

Q: How do I choose whether a lumpectomy or mastectomy is the best option?

A: More often than not, you will choose the type of surgery you feel most comfortable with. The survival data of lumpectomy with radiation is equivalent to that of a mastectomy, so we’ve learned that more surgery is not necessarily better.

Q: How soon does surgery need to be done?

A: Typically, we try to operate within a month of a diagnosis — you don’t have to decide immediately. You can learn about breast cancer, understand your options, and then make a decision you’re comfortable with. A woman’s gut feeling is most important. My patients often ask me, “What would you do?” But it’s not about me — it’s what the woman wants and what makes sense for her, her family, and her life.

Q: How can I find support during this difficult time?

A: Northern Westchester Hospital’s Bruce and Andrea Yablon Cancer Health and Wellness Program provides supportive care and holistic treatments that complement medical treatment. You can choose free integrative medicine services, including reiki, acupuncture, massage, nutrition planning, fitness and exercise plans, mindful wellness and emotional support, and a survivorship program.

We also partner with Support Connection, a group that offers free emotional, social and educational support services to women and their families and friends affected by breast and ovarian cancer. I encourage my patients to take part in these programs, which are currently virtual. The support enables women to help each other and empowers them to become their own health care advocates.

For every million Joe Schmo creators, for every dreamer whose art vanishes unheralded in the ceaseless passing of time, there’s one whose work captures the world’s attention and maintains that grip across a broad span of history. Their contributions endure in our minds, in our collective consciousness, burning a flame in our imaginations while art of equal or superior (and lesser) technical quality or artistic ambition evaporates into ash. It isn’t preordained, the select few who win the rare place. It is the byproduct of not just hard work and talent but also coincidence and serendipity. Timing and chance. Artists who possess greater ability descend into anonymity. But there’s that rarity, the one who bends history with the strum of a guitar, or the turn of a phrase, or the stroke of a paintbrush. They might have elite skill but it’s their penchant and passion for storytelling, in the right historic moment, with the right megaphone, that sets them apart and elevates their legend, mixed with elements of luck and happenstance — right person, right place, right time. In 20th century American writing, think Hemingway. In music, think early Dylan.

In modern American life, no painter/illustrator fits that description better than Norman Rockwell, a Mamaroneck High School dropout who delivered America, especially suburban, middle-class America, a new national identity. And examining Rockwell’s influence over our identity has never been more relevant than it is today.

Just think, heading into last year’s presidential election, a whopping 80 percent of voters on both the Republican and Democratic sides proclaimed that contrasts with the opposing party are about core American values. But what are those values? And who helped shape them? No figure of the 20th century did more than Rockwell to create a visual vocabulary for us around those values, creating both American myths and real aspirations.

Roadtrip
All sober ruminating aside, and with just a fun getaway in mind, my wife Alyson and I recently visited the Berkshires for a weekend and included a pitstop at the Norman Rockwell Museum in his adopted adult life hometown of Stockbridge, Massachusetts. But I came away from the experience inspired by Rockwell’s legacy, with a wider understanding of the impact he had on how we look at ourselves as Americans...

For most, the day before Christmas is a time to fetch any last-minute gifts or bring home food items from the store and prepare for the holiday.

Last Friday, Robert Tomasulo and Junior Susca were hard at work completing hundreds of “burpees,” a strenuous exercise that combines a jump, squat and pushup.

The nearly herculean efforts of Tomasulo, the owner of Level Up Strength & Conditioning in Yorktown Heights, and Susca, one of his coaches, helped raise more than $1,400 for Love Holds Life Children’s Cancer Foundation, a lower Hudson Valley-based nonprofit organization.

“It was definitely challenging but doing it for the kids kind of helps you mentally to keep pushing through, and then the community that we have here at the gym helps us even more,” said Tomasulo, who completed 600 burpees while Susca did 520. “So to have support of my gym and all the coaches and everything makes it that much easier.”

After their grueling hour-long activity, two of the families that Love Holds Life helped this holiday season arrived at the gym as part of a brief presentation. Amanda Dumont, who recently moved from Cortlandt to Newburgh and whose nine-year-old daughter Zoe is recovering from cancer, was presented with a $1,000 check.

Then Jaya Karnani of Edgewater, N.J. came with her seven-year-old daughter Kiah and older son Zehn and received $2,500 and a gift for each child. For more than a year, Kiah has battled a rare bone cancer in her jaw, which has required doctors at Sloan Kettering’s pediatric unit to take bone from her leg. Her treatments can take up to 12 hours per visit.

“All this means the world to us, first getting to see Santa,” Karnani said. “She’s almost lost her childhood. I would wake her up at seven in the morning and I’ll say, ‘Kiah, do you want to wake up and see Santa?’ She’ll say yes because she doesn’t know what tomorrow will be. She knows that maybe tomorrow she’ll be stuck in the hospital.”

Richard Senato, who founded Love Holds Life nearly 10 years ago, said there was a third family that was helped this Christmas but they were unable to come because their son was completing treatment.

Aside from bringing joy during the holidays, Love Holds Life helps families throughout Westchester, Putnam, Dutchess, northern New Jersey and Tampa, Fla. the rest of the year, he said.

“IT’s all monetary assistance that we provide families during their time of treatment, and each family we’ll help for two years,” Senato said. Dumont, a single mother, was overcome with emotion when she learned that she would be a holiday recipient. Someone on Cortlandt Manor Moms had contacted Love Holds Life to let them know of the challenges faced by Dumont and her daughter.

After the pandemic and Zoe’s battle, it was important to have an enjoyable Christmas this year.

“They got a hold of me,” Dumont said. “I was thinking this can’t be real.”

For Tomasulo and Susca, they had agreed to do one burpee for every dollar raised at the fitness center from members who would put donations in their stockings. Then Tomasulo’s father, Joe, matched those donations through his company Madison Environmental & Tank Services in Somers.

That required Susca to do 520 burpees and 584 for Tomasulo, who decided to round it up to 600. It was tough but they each hit their number. A third coach raised additional money but wasn’t there to participate.

“I’ve never gone over 160 before,” Susca said. “At the end of the day, I kept reminding myself what I’m doing it for; for a good cause, especially when I saw these young ladies. I said, alright, I’ve got to keep going.”

The Home Library to Impress – or is it More Décor?

My favorite comedian has always been the late and delightfully crude Joan Rivers whom I first encountered in a rundown comedy club in Greenwich Village when I first moved to New York City. That was before she appeared on “The Tonight Show Starring Johnny Carson” and became an instant hit.

I remember many of her jokes, and one of my favorites was her contention that men preferred dumb women and, if they were exploring under their clothing, they weren’t looking for their library card.

Even though my basic skill has always been writing, ironically, I was not an avid reader of great literature or even popular novels, preferring celebrity biographies and sometimes maybe historical texts. As an editor, then public relations practitioner, I always spent so much time reading newspapers and magazines, then blogs, that I didn’t have much time left over for anything else.

Shallow as it might seem, I have always liked the looks of books. From my earliest days, while still in college, I started a collection of books that looked good on my shelves. I admit that I didn’t always read them. Only a person who’s old enough not to care what other people might think could disclose such information, right?

When I moved from my small college town to the big city, most of my moving boxes contained those books, many unread, even before I owned any bookcases.

Through the years, I have learned that man is not so much what he eats but rather what he reads, and we all tend to partly judge other people on that. Consider that when anyone is interviewed on television in front of a bookcase, many of us have the tendency to look for the book titles to learn more about the interview subject.

If anyone were judging me by the books on my shelves, I received a tremendous boost in reputation when my wife’s aunt, an avid bibliophile, passed away and left us, among other things, a library that included 50 years’ worth of belonging to the Book of the Month Club. Suddenly we had to create a dedicated room in our home as “the library” in which there were books wall to wall as the only décor.

When we were planning our move to our new condo, we first engaged a master craftsman to design and build bookcases in our living room whose finish matched the mahogany of our kitchen cabinets. If I say so myself, they are beautiful. Interspersed with the books are various objets d’art and, overall, the effect is highly effective.

It makes me feel wealthy, with easy access to the world’s great minds.

Is Wine By the Glass Worthwhile When You’re Away From Home?

By Nick Antonaccio

December 28, 2021 - January 3, 2022

www.TheExaminerNews.com

“May I offer you a drink?”
“Yes, I’d like a glass of (white, red, sparkling) wine.”

This seemingly innocuous interchange with a waiter or bartender can be fraught with indecision, or worse, a hurried choice that has a mediocre result.

Today’s COVID-induced dining environment seems to change seasonally, sometimes monthly, even weekly. In this column, my focus is on those occasions when you are feeling relatively safe to enter an establishment for a meal or a drink.

Recently, many of us have gravitated to watching our wallets as much as our waistlines (they seem to be heading in opposite directions). Restaurants, bars and wine bars understand this inflation awareness. Offerings of wines by the glass have increased multifold around the world. But, “I’ll have a glass of the house wine” is still the typical response when ordering a glass.

Let’s change that behavior pattern. Be adventurous. Order wine by the glass with the goal of finding a “new favorite” wine. Better yet, why order a bottle when you can pick and choose multiple wines from the by-the-glass list?

As with most adventures, caution is paramount. Be aware of the pitfalls that lurk as you navigate through this process. Here are my guidelines for how and when to order a glass of wine, whether seated at your restaurant table or waiting to be seated while at the restaurant’s bar; whether meeting friends at your local watering hole or social-distancing at a wine bar.

First, the benefits.

1. When dining with the special person in our life, we tend to order one bottle for the evening, trying to find a middle ground to satisfy differing food preferences as well as the competing favors of our first and second courses. We rarely succeed. This situation cries out for a glass or glasses of wine perfectly paired with individual dishes.

2. When socializing with friends at a local bar, it’s too easy to order generically. Be inquisitive. “Which red (white) wines are you offering this evening?” Ask the server to describe the country of origin and the style of wine. “The Chilean Cabernet sounds appealing. May I sample it?” Your server has been trained to lower the barriers of selection; multiple choices usually lead to multiple glasses.

3. If you’re like me, you have a life-list of wines to enjoy before you kick the (ice) bucket. Today many restaurants and wine bars offer high-end wines by the glass. Are they expensive? Yes. Would you otherwise have the opportunity to check them off your life list? Probably not. Besides, $25 for one glass is an extravagance I can better psychologically rationalize than $200 for a bottle.

Now, the pitfalls.

1. Financially, wines by the glass yield a lower return on investment for you and an extraordinarily high return for restaurants and bars. Here’s the math: the typical restaurant or bar may need to sell just one glass to recover all or most of their cost of the bottle (not including overhead). The remaining pours from the bottle are nearly all profit.

2. “I’ll have a glass of the house wine.” My advice: Never order the house wine. It may be convenient to do so in the midst of conversation, but by spending a few minutes being more selective, you will most likely experience a new wine and expand your knowledge and palate – for only $2 to $3 more than the house wine.

3. Be sure the wine being poured into your glass is the wine you ordered. Reputable establishments will always present the bottle as they are pouring. This helps you prevent any bait-and-switch tactic.

By the glass or buy the bottle?

Do the simple math. Follow your personal logic. Find the right balance and you’ve created a win-win experience.

Six Movies Worth Checking Out This Holiday Season

As we hit the holidays and head into Oscars season, here are some takes on a few movies that you might have missed or have been meaning to check out.

Shang-Chi and The Legend of the Ten Rings
In one of Marvel's best films since “Avengers: Endgame,” “Shang-Chi and The Legend of the Ten Rings,” brings the first Asian superhero to the Marvel Cinematic Universe (MCU).

The story revolves around Shaun whose complicated family history involves a traumatizing childhood under the supervision of his father, Xu Wenwu. Wenwu is the leader of a powerful, merciless organization known as the Ten Rings and rules using the mystical power of the artifacts with the same name. Shaun, his sister, Xialing, and his friend, Katy, fight to stop Wenwu from destroying a mythical village, known as Ta Lo.

Simu Liu and Awkwafina have undeniable chemistry and make the film a fun and action-packed adventure. The movie has some visually stunning scenes and the choreography of the fight scenes are some of the best Marvel has ever produced. The story is compelling, original and not overly complicated and does its best to honor Chinese culture without going over the top.

Rating: 9.25/10
Where to watch: Disney+

The Last Duel
This historical drama, directed by Ridley Scott, stars Jodie Comer, Matt Damon and Adam Driver and tells the story of a broken friendship amidst accusations of a heinous crime.

Set in 14th century France, the film highlights the primitive nature of this time as unresolved conflicts in the courts are resolved in a duel to the death. The film is sequenced in three different parts, the truth according to Jean de Carrouge (Damon), followed by the truth according to Jacque Le Gris (Driver) and the truth according to Lady Marguerite (Comer).

The film showcases how women were viewed more as prizes rather than equals during that time and how people can trick themselves into believing they are someone they’re not. A lack of self-awareness and ignorance is evident from both male leads, even though they have different personalities and characteristics.

The movie is certainly intriguing, but does feel very slow at times. The acting is top-notch as one would expect and Comer certainly steals the show. I would expect her to get significant Oscar consideration.

If you can last through the 2 hours and 32 minutes, “The Last Duel” is certainly worth the watch and is a compelling drama that creates important discussions that are pertinent today.

Rating: 9/10
Where to watch: In theaters and coming soon to Disney+

Dune
Based on the iconic 1965 novel written by Frank Herbert, “Dune” is a science fiction film that centers around Paul Atreides who is in line to become Duke. House Atreides is in constant conflict with House Harkonnen and is sent to rule over the desert planet of Arrakis.

Devoid of abundant water supply, Arrakis is vital to the galaxy’s economy due to its abundance of “spice,” which provide heightened awareness and consciousness, but also makes the inhabitants dependent on its use. It is also valuable for navigation and interstellar travel.

Complex political intricacies become apparent, and House Atreides tries to broker a diplomatic relationship with the indigenous people, known as the Fremen. Atreides (Timothée Chalamet) discovers he has heightened abilities along with his mother, Lady Jessica (Rebecca Ferguson).

Keep in mind that this movie covers half of the novel and is only Part 1. That said, it’s long but visually stunning. Much of the film is laying the foundation and character development in preparation for the epic Part 2.

The cast does well, but there are moments of subpar writing. Chalamet and Ferguson are certainly the standouts as well as Oscar Isaac and Jason Momoa, who seem to fit nicely in whatever film they’re involved in. As someone who read the novel, I enjoyed the film, but I wasn’t blown away. For science fiction fans, it is a film worth investing the time, but don’t expect a significant climax.

Rating: 7.5/10
Where to watch: Coming soon to HBO Max (included) and Amazon Prime Video, Youtube, Apple TV and Google Play (All for a fee).

The Eternals
Another installment to the MCU falls short of lofty expectations despite a star-studded cast featuring Gemma Chan, Richard Madden and Salma Hayek.

The story involves 10 superpowered beings who were created by the Celestial Arishem to exterminate all Deviants that had infiltrated Earth. The Eternals, as they are called, are immortal and live amongst humans without interfering with their natural development in society. As they witness war, conflict and tragedy for thousands of years, some begin to wonder about their true purpose and responsibilities should be. After finding out devastating secrets about their existence, conflict emerges among the group and creates a rift.

Directed by Oscar winner Chloe Zhao, “The Eternals” wasn’t nearly as poor as reviews might suggest, but it was slow and the dialogue and storyline left much to be desired. Madden, a “Game of Thrones” favorite, as at times too stoic and robotic, but Chan delivers a solid performance as Sersi. Kumail Najiani injects some much-needed humor, while Kit Harrington and Angelina Jolie do well in their ensemble roles.

“The Eternals” isn’t a groundbreaking film but is worth a watch for any superhero aficionado.

Rating: 7/10

Catch the Planets in Nighttime Sky Before They Leave the Stage

If you’ve had a few minutes and looked to the southwest over the last few months, maybe you’ve noticed and stared at the long line of bright planets that have stretched across that part of the sky since the summer and fall.

There’s some uncertainty, but it’s thought that our word planet came to us from the Greek word planetes, a reference to how these few objects appeared to wander among the other stars. Other than their strange movement, the ancients had no way of knowing that these wanderers were anything different than the other lights in the night, let alone other nearby worlds orbiting the sun.

As with most things, these wandering planets come and go. After all these months with us, it’s time for our neighbors to leave the night sky. This gives us another chance to see them the way the ancients did. It’s tough to be together these days, but we can still enjoy the nights and draw a line back through time all the way to when the first people looked up and wondered. So, let’s head out after sundown.

Fox Lane Girls’ Basketball Team Earns Its First Victory

Christmas arrived a few days early for the Fox Lane girls’ basketball team.

Desperately in search of a win after starting the 2021-22 season with five consecutive losses, the Foxes got a visit last Wednesday afternoon from Mount Vernon, a team struggling even more and that had lost each of its first six games by at least 25 points.

With freshman guard Cara Drapala pouring in 21 points and senior Quoya Schnell adding 16, the Foxes added to the Knights’ woes with a lopsided 61-33 home victory. Scoring the game’s first nine points, a streak that began with a 3-point shot by Schnell and ended with a 3-pointer from Drapala two minutes after the opening jump, Fox Lane never trailed and built a lead as large as 32 points midway through the final quarter.

Drapala, who also finished with six rebounds, five assists and four steals, connected on her second 3-pointer of the game with just under three minutes to go in the first quarter, giving the Foxes a 12-3 lead. In the last minute of the period, Drapala drove into the lane for a one-hander that rolled in and Schnell dribbled left for a 12-foot jumper just outside the lane that enabled Fox Lane to build its advantage to 16-5.

Mount Vernon misfired on its first five shots from the field in the first quarter and began the second with four straight misses. Just 20 seconds into the quarter, Fox sophomore Lauren Antolino tossed in a shot after dribbling to the right baseline. The Foxes’ lead grew to 21-5 when Ibby Moccia drained a lefty 3-point shot near the top of the key. A pair of free throws from Antolino with 4:50 left in the half capped the extended 12-0 Fox run and left the Knights behind by 19 points.

Moccia drove the left baseline for a bucket with 2:24 remaining and Schnell, who also recorded seven rebounds and seven steals, followed with a trey from the right elbow 45 seconds later, stretching the Fox lead to 21 points. A basket by Antolino with 11 seconds on the clock sent the Foxes to the locker room with a 33-12 halftime cushion.

The second half began with Drapala driving into the lane for an easy layup and after that Mount Vernon never got any closer than 21 points. A couple of free throws by Moccia with exactly a minute left in the third quarter extended the Foxes’ lead to 49-20 and they took a 27-point advantage into the fourth quarter.

Just as she did to start the third quarter, Drapala opened the fourth with another drive through the lane for a layup. When she swished a 3-point shot from the right elbow with 5:56 left in the game, Fox Lane’s lead grew to 30 points. Two consecutive baskets by sophomore Lily Moore, the first one a short pop in the lane and the second a toss high off glass on a drive, gave the Foxes their largest lead of the afternoon, 60-28.

For the Foxes, Moccia wound up with seven points and eight rebounds. Nicole Picinich, one of Fox Lane’s senior captains, added five points, eight rebounds and six steals. Senior Susannah Kimsal grabbed 11 rebounds, while eighth-grader Morgan Clinton chipped in with seven boards.

Class C Haldane Stomps Class A Peekskill, Lakeland Drops Brewster

By Ray Gallagher  Examiner Sports Editor @Directrays

It was a light week of action, what with the holidays and the recent upticks in COVID-related issues around the NWE/ Putnam region.

Get on this HALDANE bandwagon before it flies up and there’s no room left. Blue Devil Coach Joe Virgadamo has seen his club race out to a vibrant 5-1 start, brimming with bounce, balance and effort. Haldane, the early-season Class C favorites, stepped it up a notch and hosted Class A PEERSKILL last Tuesday before the COVID scare saw a ton of cancellations across the region. The Blue Devils, the COVID scare saw a ton of cancellations across the region. The Blue Devils prevailed, 73-59, behind a troika of double-digits scorers, including Ryan Irwin (20 points), Robert Viggiano (18) and Matteo Cerretti (16). Peckskill’s Travis Brown (23) led all scorers.

LAKELAND is looking like a formidable Class A foe this winter after Coach Steve (23) led all scorers. The Bears (3-4) have now lost four straight. Lakeland has shown a tremendous amount of balance and a willingness to do whatever it takes. This year we have a young but tough, gritty and hardworking group of guys,” junior F Andrew Mendel said after scoring nine second-half points to go with a team-high eight boards. “During the off-season we committed to both the weight room and court, and that’s been a huge reason for our success so far. Coach Fallo and the coaching staff preach family and trust. We all believe in each other to score the ball or make a play. All of our guys are willing to put their body on the line to get a rebound. We know what it’s going to take to compete in our league, and we believe we can compete at a high level in Class A.”

Hornets David Mula (5 assists) and Logan Shiland (5 rebounds) each went for 18 points while Neal O’Connor (6 boards) and Grady Leonard each had four.

YORKTOWN has had its fair share of ups and downs to open the season, and down the Huskers (4-2) went in a shocking 55-34 loss to Class B Hastings, Justin Price led the Huskers with 14 points and Eddie Brucaj added nine.

“I really didn’t know what to expect with this team, but they have been a pleasant surprise,” said Bernarducci, who recently became a grandfather for the second time Dec. 19th. “Eighth-graders Caran Egan and Jesse Straus have been a pleasant surprise at 102 and 112, respectively. Luke LaMagna has been grinding out wins at 126 and sophomore Aza Numberg has improved every time he steps on the mat.

“We have big matches with Putnam Valley and Edgemont, coming up, which will determine the league championship. Our overall goal is to be in contention for a sectional championship in February.”

Christian Pershles, Nick Patrenostro and Carl Herzner have pinned all of their respective opponents. Pershles, LaMagna and Egan are all 8-0 this season.

OSSINING and Coach Tom Larm had a good December with an 8-4 record and top-six places in two dual-meet tournaments. The Pride hosted its annual Michael Nardone (Irvington) Tournament title. The Foxes did one better, winning their fourth consecutive Section 1 Division I (large school) Dual-Meet Championship by beating R.C. Ketcham (semifinal) and Arlington (final).

“Anybody who’s watched the game knows that to their advantage that we might not be that good.”

One major reason for Fox Lane’s success, according to Fox Lane Coach Anthony Rodrigues, is Duarte’s leadership. Rodrigues calls Duarte one of the great leaders he has ever coached.

Duarte said he and his teammates stick to the basics, including the newcomers who helped him get right in.

“The key to our success is leadership and the hard work on and off the mat,” said Duarte, who will attend Alfred State next fall where he will major in Electrical Construction and Maintenance, and also wrestle. “We push the guys to get to clubs and also do extra workout. We do that every single year and it leads to success. The news guys have impressed me. A lot either did not wrestle or were in middle school wrestling last year. They have stepped onto varsity and won their matches which is helping our team a lot.”

Even though Duarte credits his teammates for their hard work, he has set the example despite his injury by coming to practice every day and serving as an unofficial assistant coach. This has also helped him with his mental approach as he looks ahead to a possible return for sectionals.

“The injury took a toll on me, but going to every single practice and participating has kept me going,” Duarte said. “Being there has made me happy because I still feel like part of the team.

“When coach made me a captain, I knew I had to be a leader even though I was not physically wrestling. I still had to give 100 percent effort in anything and everything I do and help out. I help supervise drills along with coach. When it comes to some easy things to do, I be in the corner. I do that.

Fox Lane plans on carrying this momentum into the new calendar year while building on it.

“You can feel the momentum in our room. Wrestlers have bought into this and want to be at the sectional and state level,” Duarte said.

Once again, PLEASANTVILLE has established itself as a Section 1 Division II (small school) powerhouse. The Panthers, under the guidance of veteran/legendary Coach Bob Bernarducci, are currently 8-1 going into January.

Pleasantville swept its way to the Yorktown Tournament title with victories over Yorktown, Glen Cove (L.I.), Rye and Lakeland/Panas.

“I’m proud of our team for our 8-4 start,” Larm said. “We did not have a full season last year so coming in and getting off to a hot start has encouraged everyone. Each day our kids are coming in and actively working to improve. It shows each match as each wrestler has improved daily. I’m excited to watch them continue to improve and peak for the postseason.

Larm cited senior Kwaben Boating, juniors Tristan Robinson-July and Devon Almodovar, and eighth-grader Colin Libertz with establishing themselves as among the top wrestlers in their respective weight classes.

Former YORKTOWN All-Section and Springfield College All-American wrestler Jimmy Kinashian has the Cornhuskers improving daily on their way to becoming a sectional contender.

“Our guys did great at our tournament and showed great strides from the Ossining tournament which made our wrestlers feel good,” said Kinashian, who recently received his doctorate in Teaching and Administration.

“You can feel the momentum in our room. Wrestlers have bought into and there’s a whole new enthusiasm for wrestling in Yorktown. I’m excited to see what this team can do by year’s end.”

Yorktown is 6-5 overall, but 3-0 in dual matches. Luca Stanford was the highlight at the Yorktown Tournament, with three pins which earned him the most outstanding wrestler award.

“Luca winning Most Outstanding Wrestler was huge for him,” Kaishian said. “Luca is having 3-1 and 4-0 days. He’s stepping up and buying in a big way.”

Sophomore Joe Tornambé, son of former Yorktown Coach John Tornambé, is currently undefeated and ranked No. 2 in the state at 110 pounds. John Tornambé was Kinashian’s coach. Senior Dillon Carter is 10-1, with his only loss to Mahopac’s Angelo Centrone and Jason Gicksman is 8-2.

SOMERS’ coach Ron DiSanto, Jr., has built the program for the future and he is beginning to reap the benefits. Even though the young Tuskers are not a senior, they are 8-8 and showing tremendous potential, including a second-place finish at the Conklin (Nanuet) Tournament.
It’s one thing to be a skilled, gifted player on the court. It’s another thing to be an even better person off the court, the best student athlete one can be; both on and off the court. That means delivering in the clutch, when your teammates need you most, but more than anything, it’s about good grades and showing out in the classroom. Brewster senior Grace Galgano has mastered the craft of student athlete, delivering the goods on the hardwood for Coach Mike Castaldo since he called her up to varsity as an eighth-grader while maintaining spectacular academic standards.

“Grace has all the accolades; All-Section, team MVP but nobody sees how hard she works on and off the court, how much she cares for this program and what a great teammate she is,” Castaldo said of the Roberts Wesleyan-bound Galgano, who secured a full scholarship behind a 99.4 overall GPA and nearly 1,000 career points and rebounds.

Galgano, who, God willing, will reach those career milestones before the 2022 season concludes, has been the backbone of the Brewster program since 2019 and her recent Con Ed Award nod only amplifies her scholastic prowess.

“Grace is the most dominant player we’ve had on the court in my 10 years here, and she’s the most complete student athlete I’ve ever coached,” Castaldo admitted. “Emily Tapia (2010) was an unbelievable player for Brewster and went on to have a great career at Fordham. Grace is right behind her in my opinion as the second best girls’ basketball player in school history. It has been an absolute privilege to coach her and we’re lucky to have her.”

WALTER PANAS wasn’t quite as lucky last Tuesday when Galgano in-bounded a perfect dime to junior teammate Madison Dakin, who took Galgano’s drop-dead pass for the game-winning bucket with 1.7 seconds left in the Bears’ 44-42 win over the previously undefeated host Panthers (8-1). Galgano was hard on the youthful Panthers, scoring 16 points, snaring 16 boards and swatting eight shots while senior teammate Sophia Alzugaray made it rain behind the arc, hitting five treys and finishing with 17 points.

To date, Galgano, who hit the game-tying shot with 15 seconds left, has led the Bears (6-1) by averaging 22 PPG, 12 RPG and 4.5 BPG.

Freshman G Cadence Nicholas had a game-high 26 points for the Panthers and continued to show out like few freshmen in the region have in recent memory.

The run of excellent student athletes does not end at Brewster, though.

LAKELAND senior G/F Tyler Hormazabal is another in the form of quintessential. After defeating host Pleasantville, 55-32, last Tuesday, the senior G/F Hormazabal has taken her game to the next level while serving notice that Lakeland is a strong postseason challenger this year. Hormazabal’s double-double (23 points, 11 rebounds) was just short of a triple-double (8 steals) for the Hornets (8-0), who are currently setting the pace in Class A.

“Tyler is truly the hardest working player..."
I have ever coached and she is extremely determined and coachable," Lakeland Coach Miranda Mangan said. "She understands the game, has a tremendous work ethic and has not reached her full potential as a player. My favorite attribute of Tyler’s is that she makes everyone else around her better. She is an incredible student athlete and role model. The dedication and contributions she has made for this program will continue to serve as an inspiration for all of the future Hornet basketball players to come.”

Ava Lugo added 12 points and three steals for the Hornets while Megan Raefski led P’Ville with 14 points and Gianna Doto added 11.

MAHOPAC G Kristina Rush led the Indians (3-3) with 13 points in their 49-23 win over Briarcliff. The Indians, who need to identify as a better defensive team if things are going to pan out as hoped in Class A, held the Bears (4-2) to a season-low. Nine points and solid defense from junior F Lauren Beberman aided the Indians’ cause. Slow starts and sub-par defense (by their standards) have been a bit of an issue for Mahopac, which, given what the Indians have lost to graduation (defensive stalwarts Mia Klammer, Caitlyn O’Boyle), was predictable.

"We have a rough offensive start but we’ve definitely been stepping up on defense," said Beberman, who leads the team in boards and blocks. “We are constantly training and working to gel and will continue to take our best shots. We think 2022 will bring a lot for Mahopac. We definitely have it in us to be a really good defensive team, I know it. This is what we are working toward.”

Kayla McCarthy led HEN HUD (2-5) with 17 points in the Sailor’s 80-25 opening-round win over Yonkers in the Hen Hud tourney last Tuesday. Kaitlyn Raguso added 12 points and while Alex Figueroa (11) and Hailey Pearson (11) all reached double digits, unfortunately, the finals were cancelled due to COVID-related issues.

PEEKSKILL improved to 3-1 after its 47-39 win over a feisty Class C HALDANE club, who had no answer for Red Devils F Bethany Overby (19 points, 11 boards, 5 steals). Takyla Cowan-Hongosh (14 points) and Kiki Mercado (9 points) also contributed for first-year Red Dev Coach Tyrone Searight. Haldane was led by Madison Chiera’s 10 points.

CLASS AA OSSINING will head into the break at 5-1 after the Pride’s 64-55 win over visiting Kennedy Wednesday. Pride G Ella Schnecker had a career-high 25 points and tacked on five boards. Point guard Michelle Mercado orchestrated the flow with 20 points and 10 assists to go with four steals. Karen Perriott (10 points, 15 rebounds) notched a double-double while Isabella Flores (3 points, 10 rebounds) and Angela Rios (2 points, 5 boards) also contributed.

"We have a young lineup, but, as a whole, the team is adjusting to high school wrestling and gradually improving," DiSanto said. "The team is coming together and taking pride in the team aspect. The team’s energy multiplies when they feed off each individual success. When they see someone wrestle tough and come from behind, it builds confidence and makes them believe they can do it, too.”

DiSanto credits his captains, juniors, Anthony Tucci and Luca D’Orazio, for leading the team by example and with their work ethic. Sophomore Dalton Balloy leads the team with an 13-3 record. Sophomores Liam Dwyer, Justin Daniyan and Ethan Burns each have 10 wins and eighth-grader Ryan Ball (102 pounds) is 10-0.
