County IDA Approves Financial Incentives for Two Major Projects

By Rick Pezzullo

The Westchester County Industrial Development Agency (IDA) has voted final approval of financial incentives for two major development projects – Regeneron expansion in Greenburgh and Gateway II mixed-use complex in White Plains. Both represent a total private investment of $755 million.

“(The) action by the IDA clearly demonstrates that Westchester County continues to attract private capital from major corporations such as Regeneron as well as large real estate development companies. The incentives provided by the IDA will pay significant dividends in terms of job creation, new tax revenue and overall economic vitality for our county,” said Westchester County Executive George Latimer.

Regeneron’s expansion is terrific news for Westchester County and our fast-growing biotech sector. The Gateway II project will continue to build on the tremendous growth under way in downtown White Plains especially near the updated Metro-North train station. Both projects will create much-needed jobs during this crucial period in our county’s economy,” said Joan McDonald, Chair of the Westchester County IDA.

Regeneron is constructing a two-story building containing 207,940 square feet of research and development space, along with related parking and infrastructure on existing land on its campus in the Town of Greenburgh. The new $480 million facility will connect to existing buildings on the campus. Regeneron was approved for sales tax exemption of $91,940,300 and a mortgage recording tax exemption of $7,700,000. The project is anticipated to create 1,624 construction jobs and support 505 new jobs on-site. It is estimated that 75 percent of the $155 million in labor costs will utilize Westchester labor.

The Westchester IDA also voted in August final approval of financial incentives for the Gateway II mixed-use complex, a $275 million project slated for downtown White Plains. The building would feature 500 apartments, 19,000 square feet of ground-level retail space and parking for 755 cars. The project was approved for $5,360,000 in sales tax exemptions and $1,650,000 in mortgage recording tax exemptions. The project is estimated to create 600 construction jobs and 20 full-time jobs.

The 804,000-square-foot complex, which is located at 25 North Lexington Avenue on a site currently used as a parking lot, includes a 25-story tower paralleling North Lexington Avenue to the east and an intersecting 16-story tower running westerly from North Lexington to Ferris Avenue. The lobby will be located with access on both Lexington Avenue and Hamilton Avenue. The building will also include both indoor and outdoor amenities serving the residential tenants.

The plan calls for a mix of 167 studio units, 208 one-bedroom units, 117 two-bedroom units, and eight three-bedroom units. Fifteen units will be classified as affordable in compliance with the city's Affordable Housing Program. The ground-level retail will be designed to activate Hamilton Avenue and provide amenities for the Metro-North train station with service-oriented retail tenants including a signature restaurant.

Gold Star Mothers Tribute Ceremony

By Rick Pezzullo

Gold Star Mothers, families, veterans and friends attended a ceremony last week at the Memorial Tree Walkway at Kensico Dam Plaza in Valhalla for the national observance of the Gold Star Mothers. American Gold Star Mothers was formed after World War I to provide support for mothers who lost sons or daughters in the war. The name originated from the custom of families of servicemen hanging a banner called a service flag in the window of their homes. “This is about a life cut short. For these Gold Star Mothers, and Gold Star Families, we know they have to face the loss of their only child,” said Westchester County Executive George Latimer.

“Gold Star Mothers is an organization that has lived through the loss of their children in service to this great nation.”

10 Indicted for Theft and Resale of Vehicles in Westchester and NYC

By Rick Pezzullo

New York Attorney General Letitia James and New York Police Department (NYPD) Commissioner Dermot Shea last week announced the indictment of 10 members of an auto theft and distribution operation for their roles in the theft and/or criminal possession of 45 vehicles during a six-month period and their roles related to the theft and resale of more than 225 vehicles throughout New York City and Westchester.

The 303-count indictment was a result of a two-year joint investigation by the Office of the Attorney General’s Organized Crime Task Force (OCTF) and the NYPD’s Auto Crime Division.

“For two years, these individuals have fueled fear in our communities and taken some of peoples’ most valuable assets,” James stated. “During the pandemic, they moved this operation into high gear, taking advantage of New Yorkers’ staying at home to allegedly stealing more than 45 cars in six months. We exhaust every avenue to track down these thieves, and, today, we send a loud and clear message that we will not stand idly by as New Yorkers are burglarized, New Yorkers deserve to feel safe in their neighborhoods, and we thank the NYPD for their partnership and support in this effort.”

“This was a complex, high-tech operation that sought to weaponize every hidden vulnerability in the automotive industry from creating keys based on bootleg code lists to altering computer settings to creating a mill that furnished false registrations for altered VIN numbers,” Shea stated. “Being an operation that never missed a chance to exploit vulnerability, it also turned up the volume of thefts during the pandemic, knowing that people were homebound or sick.”

The investigation — dubbed “Operation Master Key,” due to the ability of the theft crews to create keys to gain access to vehicles — revealed auto theft crew members Norberto Pena Brito, Jose Lebron Pimentel, Edwin Hidalgo Estevez, Dariberto Fernandez Perez, and Hector Rivera were responsible for locating, stealing, altering, and reselling stolen vehicles throughout New York City and Westchester.

From April 2020 to October 2020, it is alleged the defendants scouted out and targeted cars to steal, obtained key code information for these vehicles from unlawful websites, and created keys that allowed them to breach and steal the vehicles. Once inside of the vehicle, they reprogrammed the vehicle’s computer system to gain control of the vehicle, disable alarms, and start the engine. In a matter of minutes, the theft crew was able to steal a vehicle without sounding alarms or drawing any attention.

attention. The theft crew was also able to reprogram the vehicle to stop recognizing the true owners’ electronic keys, so that the owners’ keys stopped working.

Members of this organization then transported the vehicles back to one of several lots located in the Bronx, where the vehicles were altered and the vehicle identification numbers (VINs) were changed in order to give the stolen cars a new identity.

This joint investigation included hundreds of hours of physical and covert surveillance, court-authorized wiretapping of numerous targeted phones, execution of search warrants, and the recovery of surveillance video capturing the thefts of numerous vehicles.

If convicted, Valverde and Saldivar each face a maximum of seven years of prison. The other defendants face a maximum of 15 years in prison.
Unvaccinated Health Care Workers Face Termination With Mandate

By Martin Wilbur

New York State’s vaccine mandate for all health care workers is now in effect, with the state bracing for possible staffing shortages. In a final plea to convince vaccine holdouts to get the jab, Gov. Kathy Hochul said Monday it is time for the state to put the pandemic behind it and that needs to be accomplished first by the people who work in direct contact with patients in hospitals, nursing homes and other facilities.

“My job, number one in this state, is to keep people safe,” Hochul said in a Monday morning briefing. “Clear, simple, there’s no way to cloud that, there’s no gray area. I need to keep people in the state safe and we’ll be nation-leading with our mandate which strikes at midnight tonight when everyone is expected in a hospital in the state of New York or a health care facility to have been vaccinated.”

Unvaccinated health care workers will be terminated from their jobs if they fail to get the shot.

In the event of potential shortages, Hochul said the state would ask retired health care workers to return to work, entice out-of-state workers to come to New York and deploy medically trained members of the state’s National Guard.

It is not certain exactly what percentage of health care workers are vaccinated. Hochul said that she will be receiving a report in the near future to get a full grasp on how many will lose their jobs. Some downstate health care organizations are reporting compliance rates of 98 to 99 percent, she said.

“We know this has been tough,” Hochul said. “We know this has been a hard decision, but we really do hope that you’ll come around to that decision to help us make sure that we can do everything we can in our power.”

The mandate comes at a time when the state has reached the 75 percent vaccination threshold for adults 18 years old and up. In Westchester County, that number is 88.5 percent and 83 percent in Putnam County.

Westchester County Executive George Latimer said that during the past week there were about 11,000 first-time recipients of the vaccine, a high number considering the rate had stalled for much of the summer.

But with the Delta variant having pushed cases higher through much of the summer, there continues to be a relatively significant uptick in people who are getting inoculated.

“As much as there’s vaccine hesitancy and vaccine resistance from various areas, we are still getting people vaccinated at this point, and we’re encouraged by that number,” Latimer said.

Countywide, there have been 729,342 people 18 years old and up in Westchester who have received at least one dose of the vaccine, he said.

Latimer was also encouraged by the continued reduction in active COVID-19 cases in the county. The mid-August high of nearly 2,800 cases has fallen to 2,137 as of Sunday.

Hospitalizations have also dropped to 63 from an August high of 110. During the past week there were two deaths, compared to a combined 13 fatalities over the previous two weeks.

The downstate region continues to have a comparatively low infection rate. On Sunday, the seven-county Mid Hudson region, which includes Westchester and Putnam, saw a 3.1 percent rate. The seven-day average stood at 2.8 percent.

However, some of the upstate regions’ rates have raised some eyebrows. On Sunday, the Southern Tier, the area that borders Pennsylvania, had a 9.1 percent infection rate, while Central New York, the Mohawk Valley and the North Country were at more than 7 percent each.

New York City had the lowest infection rate at 1.7 percent.

Westchester County had a daily rate Sunday of 1.8 percent, and 1.9 percent on the seven-day average. Putnam County was at 2.7 percent and 3.4 percent, respectively.
Two North Castle councilmembers became embroiled in a spat over masks at last Wednesday’s Town Board meeting, when one board member called out his colleague for initially failing to wear a face covering.

During the board and town administrator reports portion of the meeting, Councilman Jose Berra pressed Councilwoman Barbara DiGiacinto to put on a face mask.

Berra and DiGiacinto sit next to one another at one end of the dais in the Town Hall meeting room.

He also asked Town Clerk Alison Simon, who sits to Berra’s left and was also not wearing a mask during the work session and for roughly the first 40 minutes of the regular meeting, to put one on as well.

Berra said the emergence of the Delta variant this summer and the fact that he is often around children less than 12 years old who cannot yet receive the vaccine has made him extra vigilant.

“My goal is not to embarrass anyone or make them feel bad,” said Berra, who is vaccinated and wore two masks while spending the work session sitting in the seating reserved for the audience. “Last time people who watched saw I expressed my appreciation for the whole Town Board for wearing the masks. To me, it’s a public safety issue, a public health issue and an etiquette issue.”

He said the town requires visitors in attendance at Town Board meetings to wear masks and that government should be held to a higher standard. Furthermore, the town’s guidelines, based on guidance from the county and state health departments and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, recommends social distancing, avoiding in-person meetings, and when they do occur, they should be short.

Berra said he now must consider whether to isolate because people are refusing to wear masks.

“One of the side effects that I still live with today is that my body thermostat can really be out of whack, and I go from being very comfortable to like 150 degrees,” DiGiacinto said.

When that occurs, she said she takes off her mask to avoid extreme discomfort. DiGiacinto said she lives alone and exercises great caution because she is “petrified” of contracting COVID-19. However, the town policy for employees is if they provide proof of vaccination, they do not have to wear masks, she said. Town Board members are considered employees.

“So I take great offense at what Mr. Berra has said and to single me out, and I will put a mask on now because I don’t want to waste any more time, and as you said we have a lot of work to do,” DiGiacinto said. “But from time to time I’m going to take it off. It’s not being disrespectful, it’s because I have to.”

When Berra tried to respond, DiGiacinto cut him off by saying, “Oh, please, stop getting the last word in.”

Both DiGiacinto and Simon wore masks for the remaining three hours of the meeting.

But Berra was irked that he had to bring up the issue publicly.

“This is me being pretty angry and I really resent it, and I really hate trying to call people to task and to be responsible instead of selfish and irresponsible in my view,” he said. “So I really would appreciate people doing what I think they should be doing.”

County Legislators to Add Water Bottle Refill Stations at Westchester Parks

You’ve probably seen water bottle filling stations at gyms, schools, airports, national parks and elsewhere. Now, you’re about to see them at Westchester County parks, thanks to a new measure passed last week by the Board of Legislators.

On Sept. 20, the board passed a $750,000 plan for the Parks Department to begin replacing old water fountains at county parks with modern refill stations.

Legislator Ruth Walter (D-Bronxville), who first proposed the program, hailed the unanimous vote.

“I’m so excited that we are finally getting this project underway, and I want to thank my colleagues for their support,” said Walter, who chairs the Environment & Health Committee.

“Single-use plastic bottles are one of the most common things that pollute waterways and pile up in landfills,” she continued. “Anything we can do to reduce that is a huge plus. That means recycling, of course, but also using refillable water bottles. Plus, if you’re out at a park for a ball game, or a bike ride, or hike, you want to be able to take water with you, even if you’re not always right next to a water fountain. Being able to easily and quickly fill up your reusable water will be a really nice benefit for park-goers.”

Another benefit of the new fast-fill stations is that they will be freeze-resistant and can operate year-round, where many existing fountains have to be shut off for the winter.

Parks Department leadership told lawmakers that the department has taken inventory of all drinking fountains in county parks and will use the newly allocated $750,000 to replace as many as possible with the new fast-fill stations. The department also will look to include in future capital projects the addition of water lines where feasible to add fast-fill stations where water fountains may not exist today.

Westchester County has partnered with the county Superintendent’s Association to distribute child and adult-sized masks to students returning to in-person classes in the fall.

County personnel visited the Bedford School District’s Mount Kisco Elementary School last week to deliver 20,000 for use by the entire district.

“We want children, who are not yet eligible to be vaccinated, to continue to be safe and learn in a healthy environment,” said County Executive George Latimer. “These masks are part of the continued safety protocols our school districts are taking to keep our children well so they can succeed academically while being in the classroom.”

The county has procured more than 200,000 child-sized masks for students up to 12 years old. These masks are specifically designed to protect Westchester’s most vulnerable population of children who are not yet eligible for the vaccine.

The Bedford School District received 10,000 child-sized masks and 10,000 adult-sized masks.

Masks have already been delivered to the White Plains Central School District; Somers Central School District; Pleasantville School District; Yorktown Central School District; Greenburgh-North Castle Union Free School District; Ossining School District; Mount Pleasant Central School District; Pleasantville School District; Elmsford School District; Port Chester School District; Bronxville School District; and Mamaroneck School District.

Pleasantville High School Recognized as National Blue Ribbon School

By Abby Luby

Pleasantville High School has been named a National Blue Ribbon School for 2021, the second time it has received the prestigious honor.

U.S. Secretary of Education Miguel Cardona announced on Sept. 21 that 325 schools received the designation nationwide, including two Westchester high schools, Pleasantville and Briarcliff. The award recognizes the work of educators, families and communities that contribute to a positive, safe and welcoming educational environment.

“This award shows a true partnership,” said Pleasantville Superintendent Mary Fox-Alter. “I am honored that the residents of Pleasantville entrust us with the education of their students and I want to thank the community and the board for their support in having an exemplary high school providing multiple programs and pathways to succeed.”

Fox-Alter thanked high school Principal Joseph Palumbo, Assistant Principal Gregg Fonde and the entire staff.

“That includes teachers, psychologists, counselors, support staff, assistants, aides, clerical, custodial and our incredible high school student body and their families,” she said.

The award is especially significant because it comes during the COVID-19 pandemic, a year that challenged educators and students. The school previously was named a Blue Ribbon school in 1991.

“It is very heartwarming to be able to celebrate this incredible achievement during one of the most challenging and unprecedented periods in public education,” Fox-Alter said. Cardona also praised schools for achieving high academic success during the coronavirus pandemic.

“This year’s cohort of honorees demonstrates what is possible when committed educators and school leaders create vibrant, welcoming, and affirming school cultures where rich teaching and learning can flourish,” he said in a statement.

A school must place in the top 15 percent of all schools for student performance on state English and math assessments and graduations rates.

Fox-Alter explained that there are two levels of consideration before a school is recognized for exemplary achievement needed to qualify for the award. The state passed the first bar by meeting the criteria in performance, she explained.

The school district’s entry for the award described the high school as a place where “students actively engage in a 21st century holistic education that fosters a passion for lifelong learning, service to others, and leadership. Also, that the high school was an inclusive learning community that celebrates diversity and empowers all students to realize their full potential.”

Now in its 39th year, the National Blue Ribbon Schools Program has bestowed some 10,000 awards to more than 9,000 schools across the country. The National Blue Ribbon Schools award “affirms the work of educators, families and communities in creating safe and welcoming schools where students master challenging and engaging content.”

A local ceremony for Pleasantville High School will be planned but the specifics have not been announced. A ceremony is expected to be held in Washington at some point in the future.

County Police Special Response Team Honored By National Group

The Westchester County Police Special Response Team (SRT) recently took home some top honors following the National Tactical Officers Association’s Physical Fitness Qualification Test.

After putting 370 tactical teams from across the nation through its paces, the NTOA reported that Westchester County Police Office Jonathon Payne had achieved the highest individual score in the nation in 2021.

As a unit, SRT achieved the third highest score of any tactical team on the association’s rigorous fitness test.

Payne joined the county police in July 2016 after several years of prior law enforcement experience. He is currently assigned to the Westchester County Police Academy, where he is an instructor in defensive tactics, physical fitness and other topics. He was recently selected to begin training to become a member of the Hazardous Devices Unit, known more informally as the Bomb Squad.

The Special Response Team is a group of highly trained, specially equipped police officers who are deployed for tactical operations that involve armed-active violence situations, high-risk warrant service, dignitary protection and escorts, hostage rescue situations, armed barricaded subjects and other operations requiring specialized weapons, tactics or equipment.
Thornwood American Legion Post Flooded as Members Look for Home

By Martin Wilbur

The epochal flooding caused by the remnants of Hurricane Ida on Sept. 1 heavily damaged the American Legion post in Thornwood and now its members are searching for an alternate home.

Gilbert Rauh Post 1574 on Garrigan Avenue took on about four feet of water in its lower level following the storm, rendering the building virtually unusable, said the post’s Commander Drew McFadden. McFadden said although the upstairs portion of the structure escaped any damage, the downstairs level that contains the facility’s restrooms and kitchen, the Legion acquired the space from the Town of Mount Pleasant in 1955.

In addition to using the building for Legion functions, it has been rented out to various community organizations for meetings and events that has provided the post with much-needed revenue, McFadden said. The building will likely need expensive renovation, which the Legion wouldn’t be able to pay for, he said.

There is a water body that flows several feet from the edge of the parking lot, which overflowed during the storm. The parking area is still covered in mud after the flood waters receded.

“We have had many floods before because of that, but nothing like this,” McFadden said. “We’re in a flood plain.”

He said the post’s members, who are mostly in their 70s, 80s and 90s, have requested the town reclaim the property.

The flooding that befell the American Legion post was similar to several other areas of town and the region from the storm, which saw eight to 10 inches of rainfall within a few hours.

This week the Town Board is expected to authorize going out to bid for the third and final phase of work to improve drainage on Whittier Drive. Several homes on that street, which is across from Carroll Park, were inundated with water. It was the third time within the past decade after a major storm, two residents said earlier this month.

Fulgenzi said the town recently installed a bypass system under the north parking lot to reduce the impacts of storm water flows and sediment going into the pond and provide direct access for the water coming onto Whittier Drive. The water will be released into the culvert to the north toward the Saw Mill River.

The rehabilitation project involves dredging the pond of silt to its original depth, said the post’s Commander Drew McFadden. The post is looking to hold their meetings in a town facility, he said.

Supervisor Carl Fulgenzi raised the topic at last week’s Town Board work session, asking what could be done to help the Legion’s members. He acknowledged that the downstairs would have to be rebuilt. Town Board members suggested holding a fundraiser.

“They’re a bunch of World War II and Vietnam vets and they just don’t have the manpower,” said Councilwoman Laurie Smalley.

The rehabilitation project involves dredging the pond of silt to its original depth, re-establishing the shoreline and creating a sustainable habitat for fish and other wildlife. The additional storage area of the pond will also help store more water during storms.

The pond area and parking lot at the park are currently closed to the public, but the playground at the park remains open.

Parking on Rolling Hills Road can still be used. Scheduled completion of the project is sometime next month.

“Carroll Park has seen a substantial increase in usage by our community in recent years,” Fulgenzi said. “It is vitally important that we continue to update the park as well as add new facilities to the park.”

Future improvements planned for the park include new gazebos and fountains.

How Business Owners, Residents Can Apply for Federal Disaster Assistance

The U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) announced last week the opening of a Business Recovery Center at the New York Power Authority building in White Plains to provide one-on-one assistance to businesses and residents in submitting a disaster loan application as a result of the remnants of Hurricane Ida on Sept. 1-3.

Businesses, homeowners, renters and private nonprofit organizations in seven counties, including Westchester, are eligible to apply for physical disaster loans and for Economic Injury Disaster Loans from the SBA. Small businesses and most private nonprofit organizations in Putnam County are eligible to apply only for SBA Economic Injury Disaster Loans.

Customer service representatives will be available to answer questions about the disaster loan program and assist business owners, homeowners and renters in completing their applications. Due to the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic, the SBA has established protocols to help protect the health and safety of the public. All visitors to the BRC are encouraged to wear a face mask. Business owners in all sizes and private nonprofit organizations may borrow up to $2 million to repair or replace disaster-damaged or destroyed real estate, machinery and equipment, inventory and other business assets.

For small businesses, small agricultural cooperatives, small businesses engaged in aquaculture and most private nonprofit organizations, the SBA offers Economic Injury Disaster Loans to help meet working capital needs caused by the disaster. Economic Injury Disaster Loan assistance is available regardless of whether the business suffered any physical property damage. Disaster loans up to $200,000 are available to homeowners to repair or replace disaster-damaged or destroyed real estate. Homeowners are eligible for up to $40,000 to repair or replace disaster-damaged or destroyed personal property. Applicants may be eligible for a loan amount increase up to 20 percent of their physical damages, verified by the SBA, for mitigation purposes.

Interest rates are as low as 2.855 percent for businesses, 2 percent for nonprofit organizations and 1.563 percent for homeowners and renters, with terms up to 30 years. Loan amounts and terms are set by the SBA and are based on each applicant’s financial condition.

Applicants may apply online using the Electronic Loan Application via SBA’s secure website at https://disasterloanassistance.sba.gov/ela/s/. Applicants should apply under SBA declaration #17147, not for the COVID-19 incident. To be considered for all forms of disaster assistance, applicants should register online at DisasterAssistance.gov or download the FEMA mobile app. If online or mobile access is unavailable, applicants should call the FEMA toll-free helpline at 800-621-3362. Those who use 711-Relay or Video Relay Services should call 800-621-3362.

Businesses and individuals may also obtain information and loan applications by calling the SBA’s Customer Service Center at 1-800-659-2955 (1-800-877-8339 for the deaf and hard-of-hearing) or by e-mailing DisasterCustomerService@sba.gov. The Business Recovery Center at the New York Power Authority building is located at 123 Main St. in White Plains. It is open Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., until further notice.
Experience, Proven Track Record Serving Taxpayers Counts as Supervisor

Last week, I read a letter to the editor where my opponent in the upcoming election claimed that the Town of Mount Pleasant needs a leader who “puts the taxpayers first.” I certainly agree with this statement, and my record as town supervisor demonstrates, unequivocally, that as your town supervisor for the last seven years, I have, indeed, put the taxpayers of Mount Pleasant first.

By way of illustration, during my tenure as supervisor, the average town property tax has increased only 1.9 percent a year—below the state’s 2 percent tax cap. Moreover, in the 2021 tax year, the Town Board passed a budget that I proposed which included a 0 percent tax increase. While some residents have likely seen an increase in their overall property taxes, the town tax levy makes up only, on average, approximately 18 percent of a resident’s property tax bill. The remaining 82 percent of a resident’s property tax bill is for school and county taxes.

Additionally, during my tenure, the town’s municipal bond rating has also been increased from Aa2 to Aa1, with a positive outlook for the future. What that means is that the independent rating agencies, Moody’s, S&P, etc., after auditing the books and records of the town, have found that Mount Pleasant is fiscally sound. This high bond rating allows the town to borrow money for capital projects (roads and infrastructure improvements) at a low interest rate—ultimately saving taxpayers significant money.

As supervisor, I, together with the Town Board, also created a five-year capital budget plan to pay for road and infrastructure improvements. My pledge is to continue to put the taxpayers first, and for the next two years, I will propose a budget to the Town Board that will again include a 0 percent tax increase. All these facts demonstrate a proven record to put the taxpayers first, and I pledge to continue to do so.

I also pledge to continue the green initiatives, which I have championed during my tenure as supervisor, which will include new LED lighting, more electric vehicles, finalizing the construction of solar panel carports and many more.

During the COVID-19 pandemic, the town was also able to maintain all employment positions (no layoffs), and while our senior program was put on hold during the initial stages of the pandemic, I worked with the Town Board to ensure that our town’s seniors received their meals and other essential services without having to leave their homes. Our Recreation Department was also able to safely open the town pool for all residents and safely offer programming for our youth.

As a full-time supervisor with no paid town administrator (as some municipalities may have), I believe that my salary is commensurate with that of neighboring communities. Running the day-to-day operations of a $55 million-plus town budget with more than 150 employees and 150 part-time employees takes proven leadership and fiscal responsibility. My seven-year record as supervisor and over a decade on the Town Board, including serving as deputy supervisor for four years, demonstrates a proven track record of leadership for a town that I love, and where I have lived all my life.

Experience counts and as supervisor I will continue to support our taxpayers, our seniors, our youth, our veterans and our first responders.

Jehovah’s Witnesses Support COVID-19 Vaccinations

In his daily briefing on Sept. 23, New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio misstated the clear stand of Jehovah’s Witnesses regarding vaccines, which is currently featured on the home page of the official website of Jehovah’s Witnesses, jw.org. Jehovah’s Witnesses are not opposed to vaccination. We view vaccination as a personal decision for each Christian to make. Thus far 4,902 (99 percent) of the 4,926 at the offices of Jehovah’s Witnesses in New York State are fully vaccinated. Please note the background provided at this link to our website: https://www.jw.org/en/jehovahs-witnesses/faq-jw-vaccines-immunization.

Jehovah’s Witnesses who choose to get vaccinated view their decision to be consistent with their “love of neighbor” and their belief in the sanctity of life, two bedrock Christian principles. Jehovah’s Witnesses seek quality medical care and appreciate the many advancements of medical science to reduce the risk of serious illness. We are grateful for the commitment and dedication of health care professionals, especially in times of crises.

I do not see where your outlet has shared the comments made; however, it is important that the public has accurate information about Jehovah’s Witnesses position on vaccinations.

Mt. Pleasant Has an Obligation to Reject 31 Homes on Pocantico Lake

We face a worrisome future of both water scarcity and floods. The Town of Mount Pleasant, given scarcity, has an obligation to consider Pocantico Lake as a future source of clean water.

The town, given flooding, has an obligation to reject the building of 31 new homes, which would imperil the lake; the back-up of sewers will result in contaminating runoff, even in the event of separate sewage and stormwater pipes.

I served as a congregational rabbi in Mount Pleasant for 18 years. I am still a frequent visitor to your town and hiker in your parks. We who live downstream from you are amongst the many stakeholders to your decision – as residents and taxpayers of Westchester County, as global citizens and as living beings on a very fragile planet.

Pierce Has the Skills, Background to Be Highly Effective County Lawmaker

We have a wonderful candidate to follow Kitley Covil, who is stepping down as county legislator in District 2. Erika Pierce was assistant to Kitley, and, in addition to the knowledge she acquired on how county government operates, she brings leadership experience in the private sector and in the nonprofit world. She is a certified high school and special education teacher and was an active parent when her children went to Katonah-Lewisboro public schools.

County government is complex and involves maintaining and enhancing physical infrastructure (for example, parks, roads, bridges) and human infrastructure (services for children, the elderly, the disabled and others). Erika has worked with local office holders, school administrators and community organizations. She is known to listen and advocate.

The Census results indicated growth for Westchester. We do not want to go backwards with respect to fighting COVID-19 or being a place people come and stay to live. Vote for Erika Pierce and stay to live. Vote for Erika Pierce and re-elect George Latimer.

Nominate a Family for Christmas Tree Giveaway

United Way of Westchester and Putnam and American Christmas want to make the upcoming holiday season exceptionally festive for struggling families in Westchester. They are teaming up to give artificial Christmas trees, complete with lights and ornaments provided by American Christmas, to 15 families nominated by nonprofits and selected by United Way. United Way is looking for non-profit organizations to nominate families who have struggled this year and for whom the reception of a tree would make this Christmas exceptionally festive.

Nominations are due by next Friday, Oct. 8. Nonprofit organizations can submit nominations via a form on United Way of Westchester and Putnam’s website at uwwp.org/american-christmas-nomination. Awardees will be announced in October.

Families who are nominated and selected will be invited to American Christmas’ new storefront, at their headquarters in Mount Vernon, in early November, where they will be able to decorate their new lighted tree with a selection of ornaments provided by American Christmas. Selected families will also tour American Christmas’ spectacular showroom and receive free tickets to a Christmas light display, produced by American Christmas in North Salem.

American Christmas has been providing local communities with beautiful Christmas displays for over 30 years. American Christmas provides displays and lights for many events, most notably the Radio City Music Hall Christmas Spectacular. United Way is looking for nominees from Westchester communities whom the nominating nonprofit organization thinks are most deserving of the gift. The only requirement is that receiving families can store the tree to be reused for several Christmases.

Tom Gabriel, CEO of United Way of Westchester and Putnam, said, “We are so excited to be partnering with American Christmas on this new initiative,” said Tom Gabriel, CEO of United Way of Westchester and Putnam. “With 40 percent of our neighbors living paycheck to paycheck or in poverty, we hope that by providing some extra Christmas spirit this year, we can give a little hope to those who may need it.”

American Christmas’ CEO Dan Casterella put together these events to give back to the local community that helped grow his company.

The company is uniquely qualified to drive anyone’s holiday project from concept to installation. It has been leaders in the holiday decorating industry since 1968, with a vast knowledge of materials and keen understanding of what is necessary for successful execution.

The United Way of Westchester and Putnam is an anti-poverty organization that supports education, income and health initiatives to help residents become self-sufficient. These include the 2-1-1 helpline, early literacy programming for preschoolers, job skills training and financial empowerment for adults, as well as access to health services for all.

United Way of Westchester and Putnam is located at 336 Central Park Ave. in White Plains. For more information, call 914-997-6700, visit www.uwwp.org or visit Facebook at www.facebook.com/UnitedWayWP and Twitter @UnitedWayWP.

Seal of Approval

The Sleepy Hollow Tarrytown Chamber of Commerce took the somewhat unusual step of endorsing a political candidate last week when it announced that it will be supporting County Executive George Latimer in his re-election campaign. Chamber Executive Director Stephanie Rodnick said Latimer’s administration has assisted the business community through unprecedented challenges. “His steadfast leadership during COVID-19, his commitment to seeing us through it and his constant presence made it clear we must break our norms and endorse,” Rodnick said.
Compassion comes in all forms, and for cyclist Mark Scotch, pedaling a 1,600-mile journey is one way to raise awareness about kidney disease and donation.

Last week a stopping point for Scotch and his riding partner, Steve Wilson, was downtown Yorktown Heights. They were traveling along what they call the “Organ Trail.” Last year, Scotch and Wilson each donated a kidney to two needy recipients.

Scotch, 65, left Martha’s Vineyard on Sept. 19 and was joined by Wilson, a Katonah resident. They biked through southeastern Connecticut, and by Thursday reached Times Square in New York City at about noon. They continued to Yorktown Heights, arriving at 4 p.m.

Scotch said he hoped his Organ Trail would inspire people to learn more about kidney donations.

“More than 3,000 patients are added to the kidney waiting list each month and 13 people die each day while waiting for a kidney transplant here in the United States due to lack of donors for kidney transplants,” he said.

According to a recent study by The Kidney Project at the University of California, nearly 750,000 patients per year in the United States and an estimated two million patients worldwide are affected by kidney failure.

Wilson, 54, said he donated his kidney in February 2020.

“It was a nondirected kidney donation, which means my kidney was given to an unnamed transplant recipient,” he explained.

A nondirected living donor is someone who donates an organ, usually a kidney, as a gift; the transplant recipient remains anonymous to the donor.

Scotch gave a big hug to Leesa Thompson, who received a kidney transplant in October 2018.

“Three years ago, I was told I needed a new kidney or be on dialysis,” said Thompson, a Cortlandt resident and former speech pathologist who worked in Peekskill. “There was very little education for organ recipients, nothing about how it works or how your organs function. They really want you to be on meds and go on dialysis instead of getting a kidney transplant.”

Frustrated with her long journey to find a donor, Thompson sent out an e-mail blast and posted a message on Facebook and eventually found a donor. Since her transplant, Thompson has strongly supported and worked with the National Kidney Donor Organization (NKDO), a nonprofit advocating for the living donor process. She also supports the National Kidney Registry, which manages thousands of patient microsites, free websites to transplant patients seeking donors.

This is not the first bike trek Scotch has made to generate organ donor awareness for kidney disease. Scotch has been cycling from his home in Steven Point, Wisc. since his own kidney donation last year. This part of the Organ Trail will take him 28 days. Scotch is scheduled to arrive back home on Oct. 16.

Greeting Scotch and Wilson was Westchester County Legislator Vedat Gashi (D-Yorktown) who presented the cyclists with a county proclamation honoring the NKDO. Joining Gashi were Yorktown Councilman Vishnu Patel, Yorktown Town Clerk Diana Quast, former Yorktown supervisor Ilan Gilbert and a representative for state Sen. Peter Harckham.
P’ville Alumni, School District Retirees Honored at Alumni Plaza Ceremony

By Abby Luby

Sunny skies provided a perfect day for some 60 people gathered outside Pleasantville High School last Saturday morning to pay tribute to district alumni and retired staff.

The bricklaying ceremony is an annual event that coincides with the school district’s Homecoming Weekend. This year 55 dedicated bricks were engraved with the name of an honoree, to be added to numerous other bricks in the semicircle known as Alumni Plaza located at the school.

After Saturday’s ceremony about 85 spots in the semicircle remain unfilled.

The four-by-eight-inch bricks cost $100 each, and those with a graphic cost $125. The tax-deductible contribution goes to the Pleasantville Fund for Learning, a nonprofit organization that provides funding to enrich education programs in the Pleasantville School District. Proceeds from bricks sold this year totaled more than $5,000.

Hugs and flowers were exchanged among attendees, as former students were reunited with teachers and other alumni. Hosting the event and announcing the name on each brick were Dodd and LaVern Kittsley. The ceremony wasn’t held last year because of the pandemic.

“We’re thankful to be back here,” said Dodd Kittsley, which was followed by a hearty round of applause.

As he presented each brick, Kittsley would offer a humorous or emotional story if he knew the recipient. One brick had the name of their son Payton who graduated last year. This year the school broke a record with 55 bricks added, he said.

There to honor her father, English teacher and varsity golf coach Robert Delle Bovi who retired two years ago, was Amanda Delle Bovi, a Pleasantville alumnus who has been an eighth-grade special education math teacher at Pleasantville Middle School for six years.

“He doesn’t know I’m here and I want to surprise him,” she said.

Superintendent Mary Fox-Alter shared her memories of Rita Killian whose name is on a brick. Killian worked in the main office at Pleasantville High School in the first days of Fox-Alter’s tenure about 11 years ago.

“You could not walk into the main office without getting Rita’s beaming smile,” Fox-Alter said. “We miss her charm, energy and enthusiasm.”

Last year’s valedictorian, Carolyn Lee, was joined by 10 members of her family, including six who have graduated from Pleasantville High School from 1970 to 2007. Three separate bricks were for former Board of Education president Larry Boes and his children, Rial (Class of 2021) and Will (class of 2020).

“This event has funded the district for years,” said former Pleasantville school board member Louis Conte whose three sons are district graduates. “Alumni Plaza acknowledges the history and the people who contributed to the district’s life. It keeps the spirit alive and kicking.”
Young Readers Rejoice: Chappaqua Children’s Book Festival Returns

By Martin Wilbur

This Saturday’s Chappaqua Children’s Book Festival may be scaled down compared to previous years but there is still plenty for young readers and their families to get excited about this weekend.

While organizers have reduced the number of authors and illustrators to about 70, just under half of what had become the typical turnout, much of what makes the day special remains intact. Children will be able to meet some of their favorite authors in a celebration of reading, literacy and fun for everyone.

“I’ve always known if we couldn’t do it safely, we wouldn’t do it and now we absolutely feel we can do it safely, especially (as) the vaccination rate keeps rising in our area and the schools are doing a great job at containment,” said festival Executive Director Dawn Greenberg. “We’ve had one author back out because of underlying conditions but we feel confident, and our authors feel confident, we can do it right and safely.”

All visitors at least two years old will be required to wear masks, regardless of vaccination status, Greenberg said. However, reservations to attend at one-hour intervals that had been announced last May have been scrapped, she said. With various precautions being taken that was no longer deemed necessary.

The festival, which will be held from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., will be in a new location this year. It has been moved to the Chappaqua train station parking lot, which will allow the authors’ and sponsors’ tents to be about 10 feet apart and in a new configuration. Volunteers will make sure to encourage social distancing should it get crowded.

There will also be plenty of parking available for those who drive toward the back lot at the train station near the Chappaqua Farmers Market.

In recent years, the Chappaqua Children’s Book Festival had been held on the opposite side of South Greeley Avenue on the grounds of Robert E. Bell Middle School.

Greenberg said the day will still be a special celebration. There will be four read-along sessions held, and similar to last week’s New Castle Community Day, authors will bring items with them to create a sense of the community coming together again and sharing stories, she said.

There will also be celebration of the 25th year of Biscuit, the popular bestseller used to launch the “My First I Can Read Series” from HarperCollins, and the late children’s author, Jean Craighead George, who had been a Chappaqua resident. The Town of New Castle will soon dedicate a town park in her memory.

Of course, there are the authors and illustrators. While it was difficult to pare down the roster from 150 to about 70, Greenberg said, many of the favorites from previous festivals will return. Dan Gutman will back, as will Chris Grabenstein, The New York Times best-selling children’s writer, and many others.

Greenberg said, “We just need the weather to cooperate.”

New Castle Acting Supervisor Jeremy Saland said the town owes a debt of gratitude for the efforts of Greenberg and a small army of volunteers who organize and hold the annual event. Last year’s festival was canceled because of the pandemic.

“It is just an incredible testament to their energy and vision, and it really shows off this town as a can-do community, so I couldn’t be more proud of them,” Saland said.

Visitors can buy lunch from one of four food trucks or get a snack from two ice cream carts that will be at the festival.

For more information about the Chappaqua Children’s Book Festival and for a complete list of the authors who will be attending this year, visit www.chbookfestival.org. The event is scheduled to be held rain or shine.

Annual Support Connection Walk Adjusting to COVID-19

By Rick Pezzullo

The COVID-19 pandemic continues to be a challenge, and for non-profit organizations such as Yorktown-based Support Connection, adjustments must continually be made to remain viable and provide the services they have offered for the last 25 years.

The most significant change Support Connection was forced to make last year was with its annual Support-A-Walk for Breast and Ovarian Cancer, normally held the first Sunday in October at FDR State Park in Yorktown.

Due to the health and safety restrictions of the pandemic, that live event wasn’t possible in 2020, so instead it took place virtually with a theme of “Walk With Us, Wherever You Are.”

Still not out of the woods this year with COVID-19, the 2021 version of Support-A-Walk, scheduled for this Sunday, Oct. 3, still won’t feature the typical crowd of thousands of people that have made it a can’t-miss day of love and hope.

“For years, we have been helping people nationwide. Now, rather than just making a donation to the Walk, people throughout the country are able to walk in their own communities, regardless of where they live,” said longtime Support Connection Executive Director Kathy Quinn.

Since Support Connection does not receive funds from any national cancer organizations, including Relay for Life, Susan G. Komen or Making Strides, it relies heavily on donations raised from Support-A-Walk. The goal is to raise $250,000.

While Support Connection is encouraging everyone once again to “Walk With Us, Wherever You Are,” FDR Park will be open for anyone that wants to lend their support in person and get some fresh air.

Support Connection representatives will be at the park by 9 a.m., in the area near Parking Lot 1. For those who decide to walk in the park, there will be a Support-A-Walk Welcome Table, with volunteers to answer questions. At 9:45 a.m., a brief opening ceremony will take place on the walk path next to Parking Lot 1. The kickoff is at 10 a.m.

Support Connection is suggesting a good place for groups or individuals to meet is the grassy area near Parking Lot 1 between 9 and 9:45 a.m. Everyone who will attend in person is being encouraged to practice social distancing, wear masks when in close proximity to others and use hand sanitizer if needed.

A. DeVito & Son has been one of many businesses that has backed Support Connection over the years.

“If we can’t bring our community together in person, we are all about spreading the word about breast and ovarian cancer and making us all aware of the disease and the importance of early detection,” said Janet DeVito.

“The most important reason we support Support Connection is its incredible staff and volunteers,” DeVito added. “They know first-hand what these women and their families are going through and are uniquely qualified to provide them with help, strength and hope during a very difficult and frightening time. This is not a job for the Support Connection staff, it is a vocation and they do it with incredible passion, compassion and empathy.”

To learn more about the Support-A-Walk or to donate or participate, visit www.supportconnection.org/support-a-walk or contact Support Connection at 914-962-6402 or walk@supportconnection.org.
The Lazy Man’s (or Woman’s) Guide to Easy Furniture Refinishing

Some years ago, I wrote a Home Guru column called The Lazy Man’s Guide to Gardening which proved very popular. It presented an assortment of techniques to bypass back-breaking labor in the garden (mostly focusing on proper mulching). I still receive comments from amateur gardeners about how helpful that article was to them, one woman even going so far as to say the piece improved her experience of living in the country.

Since then, writing as The Home Guru, I’ve always sought to explore ways of making home life and chores easier. Why go for the harder way to do things, after all? Such is the case with refinishing the surfaces of furniture. Not so long ago, I wrote a column about classic refinishing techniques for furniture that was purist in its approach, step by step, to achieving a fine finish, called a “French polish finish.” But more recently, I reconsidered my approach in that article and acknowledged to myself that I was violating my own quest to make things easier, rather than harder, for the homeowner in everything that he or she does.

So, here’s the easier – much easier – approach to furniture refinishing.

When my wife Margaret and I owned an antiques shop, first in Brooklyn Heights (big success over a five-year period), then in Yorktown Heights (big dud, which closed after a year), we sold a lot of old furniture, some genuinely antique (over 100 years old) and some reproductions from the early 1920s to the ‘40s. Many times, it would come from auction houses or private homes with damaged finishes, but that was okay because we had an instant fixer-upper in our trusty bottle of Old English Furniture Polish, which filled in the scratches quite nicely.

But sometimes there is a need or desire to do a better job of refinishing wood surfaces, but still, it need not be a laborious or costly project.

While purists might insist on stripping down a finish to bare, raw wood, I always preferred to work with what I had, without starting from scratch, and the major tool for doing that is steel wool. Specifically, 000 steel wool, which is its finest version. If the surface is really bad, one might start down from scratch, and the major tool preferred to work with what I had, without starting from scratch, and the major tool for doing that is steel wool. Specifically, 000 steel wool, which is its finest version.

After that dried thoroughly, I would decide whether I wanted to create a patina with the semi-gloss, and, after it dried, I would buff it with the 000 steel wool, just as I would do with shellac, then complete the task with wax shoe polish. As I look around my house at pieces of furniture from various periods of my life, I am proud to say that their finishes are still in great shape from having used this technique.

Jacob Burns’ Popular Jewish Film Festival Returns for 20th Year

By Martin Wilbur

The Jacob Burns Film Center’s Jewish Film Festival has been the longest running of all its annual special programming and events.

It’s been 20 years since the independent, nonprofit theater and cultural arts in downtown Pleasantville opened to film lovers, and for 20 years the Jewish Film Festival has been a fixture on the calendar.

Now in the second half of 2021, after more than a year of closures and schedule upheavals, the festival is opening for two weeks on Thursday evening in an uncustomary spot on the calendar. Previously, it had typically been held in March or April.

Regardless of season, subject matter or generation of filmmaker or film patron, Bruni Burres, who programmed the 23-film lineup for the festival, said its popularity has been unwavering. That speaks to the wealth of talented Jewish filmmakers but also of stories that span the decades that appeal to multiple generations of families who enjoy the Jewish Film Festival.

“I think different waves of what people wanted to tell stories at different times in the world, especially just soon after or just before World War II,” Burres said. “But I would say the last 20 or 30 years, there’s been a real awakening of the breadth of what are the Jewish stories of people of different ages want to tell, especially young people.”

The festival kicks off Thursday with the Nir Bergman feature “Here We Are,” a dramedy that explores the complications of family ties, the rights of the differently abled and the melancholy of aging. Aharon, a middle-aged divorcé, has devoted himself to raising his son, Uri, who is autistic. Uri is becoming a young man, and his mother is eager for him to move away from her ex-husband, but father and son are reluctant to separate.

“Shiva Baby” is the first feature-length work from filmmaker Emma Seligman, hilarious and witty comedy-drama about life, families, religion and taboos, all timeless themes, Burres said.

“I think people of all ages can see it because they can see their own relatives in this, even if their own relatives and their timing was from the 1950s and this is from 2020,” Burres explained.

Previous festivals have in the past also pieced together episodes of television series from other countries that focus on topics of general Jewish interest, and this year is no different. Six episodes of a television miniseries from Switzerland, “Labyrinth of Peace,” will be shown twice, each in sets of three episodes each.

It explores whether or not the Swiss were neutral during World War II when the Nazis had overrun much of Europe.

The first program consisting of the series’ first three episodes will be screened on Oct. 11 while the final three episodes are scheduled for Oct. 4 and 13.

Burres said an intriguing and inspirational film on the schedule is “1irmi,” about a German woman who had experienced life-changing tragedies at a young age. However, because of her life’s story, after World War II she develops a love of life, living until 96 years old.

“This is an incredible film about her story about all the chapters in her life and how she kept going,” she said.

As part of this year’s festival, the Burns will present a three-film tribute to actor George Segal, who died earlier this year at 87 years old. The tribute is comprised of the movies “The Hot Rock,” “A Touch of Class” and “California Split.”

For tickets and the full schedule of films that are in this year’s festival, which runs from Sept. 30 through Oct. 14, visit www.burnsfilmcenter.org. The theater is operating with 60 percent audience capacity and vaccinations and face masks are required for all patrons. If a patron is seated and is eating or drinking, they may remove their mask.

World-Class Care is Now Close By for Diseases of the Nervous System

A new regional neurosciences program linking Northern Westchester Hospital in Mount Kisco and Phelps Hospital in Sleepy Hollow is in place, headed by neurosurgeon David Gordon, MD, regional chief of neurosurgery at both hospitals.

What’s the benefit of a regional neurosciences program in Westchester?

1. We offer state-of-the-art treatment for stroke. Unless treated quickly with the latest interventions, strokes can cause severe disability or be fatal. A revolutionary minimally invasive procedure called endovascular mechanical thrombectomy is so effective that people who might have been permanently disabled or even died are actually walking out of the hospital.

2. We have an advanced multidisciplinary spine surgery program. Relatively common conditions such as a herniated disc (a piece of a shock-absorbing disc puts painful pressure on the spinal cord or its nerves) and spinal stenosis (an arthritis-like condition of the spine causes an overgrowth of bone that puts painful pressure on the spinal cord or its nerves) can be completely relieved by our program’s intensive cross-disciplinary surgical approach.

3. Gamma Knife treatment for metastasized brain tumors. In this situation, a cancerous tumor, arisen somewhere else in the body, has spread to the brain. Our program has the only Gamma Knife in Westchester County and permits highly focused delivery of radiation to the tumor while protecting the surrounding brain. Even with Stage 4 cancers, the technology can prolong a person’s quality and length of life.

4. We’re a regional center for pituitary surgery. Lying directly under the brain and part of it, the pituitary gland controls hormones for the entire body. Most pituitary tumors are benign, surgery is called for when a tumor puts pressure on the nerves that serve vision, threatening blindness, or when it produces excess hormones itself.

5. We are experts in extremely complex skull base neurosurgery. Tumors can develop at the base of the skull, an area from above the eyes to the back of the head, through which run important nerves and blood vessels. By using endoscopic techniques that provide superior viewing capacity, we can now remove tumors formerly thought to be inoperable.

6. We offer cranial navigation “GPS system” for brain tumors. The system guides us to the diseased area, ensuring we avoid injuring key blood vessels that supply blood to the brain or areas that serve such critical faculties as speech and motor functions.
Peekskill Woman-Owned Bakery Makes Dam Good English Muffins

By Martin Wilbur

There are plenty of shops that primarily sell bagels, so why not have a bakery that produces only English muffins?

That was one thought that crossed Denise Weale’s mind when she and her family launched Dam Good English Muffins about four years ago. Today the bakery not only supplies Westchester retail outlets with four varieties of sourdough English muffins – original white, whole wheat, multigrain and cinnamon swirl – but they have robust sales with wholesale outlets, including FreshDirect, and online customers nationwide.

“When you think about it, it’s not that much different than bagels,” said Weale, who opened the bakery with her husband, Ross, and daughter, Olivia, who’s the operations manager. “They just make bagels, so we’re doing the same thing.”

Business had grown to the point where Weale moved into a 1,500-square-foot warehouse space on John Walsh Boulevard in Peekskill in spring 2020 during the height of the pandemic and has since taken over about an additional 700 square feet.

Denise and Olivia Weale and their six other employees make about 1,600 English muffins a day that are vegan, all natural and soy-free and grilled on avocado oil.

Since the muffins are made with a combination of sourdough starter and dry yeast, it doesn’t have the overpowering tangy taste that could turn off some who may not be sourdough lovers. “I really didn’t know anybody else doing sourdough English muffins,” Denise Weale said. “We wanted to do something that was healthier, no preservatives, there’s no artificial ingredients, no GMOs, and that’s pretty much why we stayed with that.”

Olivia Weale said the process to make the muffins is more involved because of the sourdough. The flour, water and sourdough starter are mixed in large bowls, divided, and after rising, are laid out to be pressed and cut on their hydraulic press machine before being placed in the refrigerator to ferment overnight. Then the next morning, they’re grilled on each side.

After the griddling, the muffins are placed on trays that are cooled by a large fan for about 15 to 20 minutes before they are packaged. Each package contains four muffins. She said the sourdough starter is the key to the muffins. “It’s kind of like wine. It ages and gets better over time as long as you take good care of it,” Olivia Weale said. “So we’re feeding it every single day and you dump some of the discard out so it’s fresh and it’s alive.”

The idea to start an English muffin bakery was not something that Denise Weale said she had ever contemplated, even though she and her husband are both graduates of Johnson & Wales University’s culinary program. She recalled visiting with friends one year around the holidays. After a friend shared some homemade English muffins, Ross, who has always had a passion for bread baking, declared that they were never going back to store-bought English muffins.

So, they started baking their own English muffins, and for the holidays, they gave them as gifts to friends and family. After receiving positive feedback, they thought “How about an English muffin company?”

Then one day in 2016, when taking a walk in the neighborhood, the Weales noticed a single piece of trash on the sidewalk – a Thomas’ English Muffins box. The family took this as a sign to launch the company. That box is hanging in the bakery today.

Weale signed up to sell her product at various farmers markets, then pitched them to the Croton-on-Hudson bakery Baked by Susan. That led to her English muffins being sold in additional retail locations in other communities before reaching an agreement with FreshDirect about a year-and-a-half ago, which is now one of the bakery’s largest accounts.

Olivia Weale said their muffins come in different shapes and sizes, not uniform like the larger companies’ packaged products. It’s also in keeping with the company’s commitment to social justice issues, which includes work with Caring for the Hungry and Homeless of Peekskill and other organizations.

“We have the triangles, which is a result of the way the dough gets spread out,” she said. “We take pride in the fact that all the muffins are different. Our slogan is ‘Every One is Different,’ so the muffins are different shapes and sizes, so just like in general, everyone in the world is different and we embrace the differences between us.”

This Saturday morning, starting at 8 a.m., the Weales will be onsite making vegan breakfast sandwiches on their English muffins at Peaceful Provisions bakery’s new store in Beacon, which will be making a sourdough-themed donut with Dam Good English Muffins’ starter, as part of a Sourdough Fest.

Mt. Pleasant Shows its Spirit Raising $60G for Childhood Cancer Research

By Martin Wilbur

Last Sunday morning was a perfect day for football. The air was cool and crisp and the bleachers were full of parents, friends and community members who turned out at Westlake High School for the seventh Mount Pleasant Wildcats Spirit Day.

But the real winner last weekend wasn’t any of the three teams in different age groups from the Mount Pleasant Wildcats Football Club and Cheer program or their opponents from Valhalla, Armonk or Scarsdale. It was the Ty Louis Campbell Foundation, a non-profit organization established nearly a decade ago to help raise money for innovative research geared toward finding treatments and cures from the most aggressive forms of childhood cancer.

The foundation is named after Ty Campbell, who died of a brain tumor in October 2012 when he was five years old. His parents created the organization so one day no other parents will have to go through the heartache that they experienced of losing a child to cancer.

“We really rely on this event,” said his mother, Cindy Campbell, whose foundation has raised nearly $2 million since its inception. “We count on it.”

Of most importance, progress is being made earlier, and the Mount Pleasant community came through in organizing Spirit Day in a hurry. “We pulled together in three weeks and it’s even bigger and better, so it’s a testament to a lot of people and volunteers because that’s what this day is truly about,” she said. “It’s about community and teaching our kids to give back and fight for something bigger than them.”

After the first of three football games, Mount Pleasant Supervisor Carl Fulgenzi and Councilwoman Laurie Smalley presented Campbell with a town proclamation, lauding her and the foundation along with the Spirit Day volunteers who have made the event an important day on the local calendar.

Fulgenzi fought back tears when describing how much Spirit Day means to her and to children who will hopefully be able to not just survive difficult childhood cancers but grow up and thrive.

“On a personal level, it’s very important for me to know how this community remembers my son and know the impact he made years ago is still remember and honored in this beautiful way with so many people,” she said.

This year’s Spirit Day had its most successful renewal, raising $60,000 from donations and sales at the event, easily eclipsing the $42,000 that was brought in from the day in 2019, said event organizer Lori Ferrara.

She said the pent-up energy and excitement from not being able to hold the event last year along with perfect weather helped drive community members to spend the day outside with family, friends and neighbors, sparking the turnout. In the seven years that Spirit Day has been held, it has now raised about $165,000 for the foundation.

Ferrara said it wasn’t certain that the event could be held this year until about three weeks earlier, and the Mount Pleasant community took on the event organizer Lori Ferrara looks on. Campbell established the Ty Louis Campbell Foundation, which raises money for childhood cancer research, after her son died from a brain tumor in 2012.
Tenants Sought for Berkeley College’s White Plains Campus

RM Friedland, a regional leader in commercial real estate brokerage, has announced it is marketing Berkeley College’s Westchester campus at 99 Church St.

The property represents a rare opportunity for a user, investor or developer to lease or own a mixed-use property in the heart of downtown White Plains.

Berkeley is closing its operations in Westchester County and consolidating to its New York City location. The property features two detached buildings, a four-story, 110,000-square-foot office building with full basement at 99 Church St. and a six-story dormitory-style residential building at 6 Cottage Place with 55 dormitory units that have 140 beds.

The office building, which is partially leased, is versatile and could be ideal for an institutional user who may also need the dormitory units in the residential building. It could also be equally attractive to a developer as the nearly one-acre site could accommodate an estimated 136,000 square feet of new development assuming the demolition of all existing buildings and could also be attractive to a value-add investor as the office building currently has four tenants leasing 24,103 square feet of space.

“This outstanding property offers a wide range of benefits for a purchaser including an excellent location in the central business district, easy access to mass transit, great demographics and a rare opportunity to be part of the momentum of a vibrant and booming downtown,” said John Barrett of RMF’s Investment Division.

“This property could be perfectly suited for repurposing, a trend which has become more common in the Westchester office market,” added Chris O’Callaghan of RMF’s office division. Chris and John will be teaming with RMF team members Charlie Dewey and Reed Waggoner on this new assignment.

Westchester Walk to End Alzheimer’s Set for This Sunday at WCC

The Hudson Valley Chapter is pleased to announce that the annual Westchester Walk to End Alzheimer’s will be held this Sunday, Oct. 3 on the campus of Westchester Community College in Valhalla.

Check-in will open at 1 p.m. and the opening ceremony will be at 2 p.m. followed by the walk. The walk had previously been held at SUNY Purchase.

“We are excited to have our biggest walk at this fantastic new venue this year,” said David Sobel, executive director for the Alzheimer’s Association Hudson Valley Chapter. “We appreciate Westchester Community College welcoming our event to their campus.”

Appropriate safety protocols will be in place, and walkers who prefer to walk from home can still engage in many experiences through our mobile app. Per CDC guidelines around crowded outdoor settings, all attendees are asked to be vaccinated against COVID-19 or wear a mask when in crowded areas. Masks will be available on site.

The Westchester Walk to End Alzheimer’s has been among the top 30 highest fundraising walks in the country for the past five years. Last year, despite the pandemic, it raised more than $430,000.

During the COVID-19 pandemic, the Alzheimer’s Association Hudson Valley Chapter has continued to offer its programs and services online and by phone. These include care consultations, where families affected by dementia can speak with a licensed social worker about helpful community resources as well as support groups where caregivers, family members and people in the early stage of the disease can share their experiences with others who understand.

The chapter also offers free educational and social webinars for the general public and families living with Alzheimer’s and other forms of dementia. Some of these are gradually returning to an in-person format.

For specific dates, times – and in some cases, locations – for support groups, educational and social webinars, visit alz.org/hudsonvalley or call the 24/7 hotline at 800-272-3900 to register. Pre-recorded online educational programs are also available.

Northern Ireland Odyssey: Take Two (Post-COVID, Post-Brexit)

Like a thief in the night, COVID-19 swept down in the waning days of winter 2020 and hasn’t left us yet. Hoping it will soon abate, we turn our sights back to unspended plans and delayed dreams.

For my wife and I, and two close friends, that involves a foray into the North of Ireland, where adventures await.

I have roots all over Ireland, and the north is not to be neglected. With Down, Fermanagh and Donegal ancestors, I’m going home, regardless of borders, Brexit, COVID or whatever flag flies on the masts of municipal buildings – Union Jack, Tricolor or the Red Hand of Ulster. It’s all Ireland to me, no matter what.

There are four Irelands. You can call them provinces – Leinster, Munster, Connacht and Ulster – or use the compass, as I prefer, the East, the South, the West and the North. Each one has a different flavor, a different sense. In their use of Ireland’s native Gaelic, each has its own dialect. And when speaking English, it is far easier to understand a resident of Dublin (the East), than a Galway man or woman (the West).

On an earlier trip to Ireland, I touched on sections of each region, save the North. And on this trip, my aim is to understand a resident of Dublin (the East), when speaking English, it is far easier to understand a resident of Downpatrick, than a Galway man or woman (the West).

Dublin’s fair city, spending the first two days there. On our list are some standards, such as the National Museum, Trinity College, Grafton Street, St. Stephen’s Green, the Ha’penny Bridge, the Guinness Brewery, Dublin Castle and the General Post Office, site of the Easter Rising of 1916.

Less traveled spots are on tap as well – Iveagh Gardens and the Dublin Writer’s Museum.

From there, on a jaunt of 119 miles to Belfast, we’ll enter the United Kingdom, on the way driving through the Mountains of Mourne, and stopping for a visit to St. Patrick’s grave in Downpatrick.

We’ll skirt the North Channel Coast, where Scotland lies a scant 13 miles over the water. A tour of Belfast promises 23 sites, including Titanic Belfast, where the RMS Titanic was built and launched, only to sink on her maiden voyage in 1912. Belfast City Hall and the Falls Memorial Garden are also on deck. No “Game of Thrones” on this trip!

Then it’s on to Derry – or Londonderry – depending upon which view of Ireland one holds. On the way, we’ll tour the nine Glena of Antrim, the Giant’s Causeway, the Carrick-a-rede Rope Bridge and perhaps a stop at the Old Bushmills Distillery. In Derry proper, we’ll visit the Tower Museum, the Guildhall Museum and the iconic City Walls.

Then we leave the United Kingdom, entering Donegal, one of the nine counties of Ulster, three of which are in the Republic of Ireland. We’ll visit Glenveagh Castle and Glenveagh National Park. With Sligo as our goal for Day Five, we’ll skirt the Slieve League Mountains, see Yeats’ grave, pass Ben Bulben, and tour the Belleek China factory.

Leaving Sligo, on Day Six we’ll push through Mayo and the Connemara region, and stop at Westport, billed as the most attractive town in County Mayo. Croagh Patrick, Ireland’s holiest mountain, will loom its massive height before us, and some of us hope to brave the three-hour climb up and back. Killary Harbor and the Maamturk Mountains promise some spectacular sights, before ending the day at Clifden.

Day Seven takes us to Galway Town, where we’ll visit Eyre Square, the Salmon Weir Bridge and the Spanish Arch. Then we’re off to County Clare, where we’ll see the Cliffs of Moher, the Burren and Poulnabrone dolmen, one of the most ancient and haunting burial tombs in Ireland. A night spent in Ennis promises some great Irish traditional music.

Then it’s a long journey back to Dublin, and a return flight to the good old U. S. of A. All this next year, COVID-allowing!

The Westchester County Association (WCA) announced at last week’s meeting of the Board of Directors that Susan Fox, CEO and president of White Plains Hospital, was elected to succeed Bill Harrington as the next chair of the organization.

Fox will step up from her current role as vice chair to spearhead innovative ways the WCA can continue to make an impact on economic vitality throughout Westchester County and the surrounding region.

Fox will begin her tenure as WCA chair on Jan. 1.

“I am pleased to share the news that Susan Fox has been unanimously selected to chair by our board of directors,” said Michael N. Romita, president and CEO of the Westchester County Association.

“Working with Susan over the past 18 months, it’s easy to see her dedication to businesses and nonprofits throughout the region. With a visionary leader such as Susan at the helm of our board, the WCA will continue to set the professional agenda for economic growth throughout the region,” said Romita.

As one of the county’s most influential health care executives, Fox has been at the forefront of the industry’s regional transformation over the last decade. By forging strategic partnerships and aligning and recruiting top clinical and administrative talent, Susan has driven the expansion of White Plains Hospital, which is a member of the Montefiore Health System, into a leading provider of advanced health care in the Hudson Valley.

She has been a fearless advocate for members of the community throughout the COVID-19 pandemic and will bring that same tenacity to the new role she holds as WCA chair.

Fox said she is honored to take on the role and thanked outgoing chair Bill Harrington for his longstanding commitment and dedication to the organization.

“Bill helped to advance the mission of the WCA, acting as a strong advocate for our members while overseeing nearly a decade of strong economic growth and development in the region,” Fox said.

“Westchester has become an economic powerhouse because our community understands that a rising tide lifts all boats. The WCA has been able to create something truly special for the business community through its collaborative spirit, private/public partnerships and a constant desire to innovate and evolve.”

Fox added that she looks forward to working alongside Romita to support local corporations and businesses rebound from this pandemic and chart a course for a strong and vibrant future.

In addition to her new role at WCA, Fox also was appointed to the American Hospital Association Board of Trustees in 2019 and chairs its Regional Policy Board 2. She serves on the Columbia University School of Nursing Board of Visitors and the Board of the Healthcare Association of New York State (HANYS). Fox is a fellow of the New York Academy of Medicine.

Fox will make her first address to the Westchester business community as incoming WCA board chair during the organization’s annual leadership event on Tuesday, Nov. 30 from 5:30 to 8:30 p.m. at the Westchester Marriott Hotel in Tarrytown.

The WCA is committed to smart growth, economic vitality and presenting a strong independent voice on behalf of the professional community. Its key objectives are economic growth, business development and policy advocacy on behalf of its members. For more information, visit www.westchester.org.

How to Define Natural? It Depends on the Label

By Nick Antonaccio

We all are aware that highly processed foods in our diet can disrupt our body’s natural ability to maintain the delicate balance between a healthy body and compromised states of health. Food additives also affect the natural vitamins and beneficial organisms present in raw foods.

Foods subjected to sterilization or high-heat cooking are stripped of some or all of the nutritional value that our bodies rely upon to be healthy and to ward off disease. Fresh fruits and vegetables grown with artificial chemicals added to the soil, leaves or fruit may do more harm than good.

The marketing departments of food companies understand Americans are becoming more healthy-food conscious, notwithstanding our inability to maintain our health as obesity and its related health problems are still growing. They have embarked on campaigns to label their food products to project an image of wholesomeness.

One term that is becoming more popular in describing healthy foods produced in a non-invasive manner is “natural.” Whether in advertisements or on package labels, this term has become ubiquitous in our daily lives. But what does natural – or its idealized synonyms, such as organic and/or sustainable – mean for consumers? The additional reference point – biodynamics – is the extreme form of naturally managing a vineyard. Stand by for a future column exploring this precept.

Since “natural” is not a term defined by the FDA, it is subject to interpretation (manipulation?) by those imprinting it on packages and labels. Hence, it is difficult for the consumer to discern whether this product term meets his or her criteria.

Wine is no different. The definition of “natural wine” is in the eye of the beholder, who doesn’t always have 20/20 vision. Is natural wine a connotation of being “organically” produced, in a “sustainable” manner? And just what is organic or sustainable? They are ill-defined as well – and therefore generally unreliable.

There is a notable exception. Many wine-producing nations have government-regulated terms for a wine to be classified “certified organic.” If this identifier appears on a bottle, the consumer is assured the producer followed strict standards to earn this coveted designation. However, relatively few producers of organic wines seek this very expensive, time-consuming and bureaucratic-forms-preparation path to certification.

My view is that to best understand whether a particular wine has been produced in a historically correct manner, which I define as having no artificial input from producers and satisfying the physiological needs of our bodies, we must in large part rely on the originating winemaker. Relying on government or big business to satisfy this requirement is not feasible – or rewarding – in the 21st century.

Reasonably reliable methods to ferret out these winemakers include:

1. Find an engaged wine merchant who is simpatico with your viewpoint. He or she will reject the term “natural” as vague and unreliable. Through their own research, coupled with interfaces with multiple winemakers, distributors and importers, they have gained a knowledge that should enable them to discern between “nature’s wine” and “industrial wine.” If they are so engaged, they can direct you to wines that are the fruit of the land.

2. Take advantage of your internet. Many winemakers across the globe have created sophisticated websites and have formed consortia of like-minded cohorts that disseminate the gospel according to nature. Natural wines are an admirable trait to seek in all food product labels. Be careful to research the facts behind these claims.

Looking to Retire Early? Ask Yourself These Four Questions First

The pandemic has changed our lives in numerous ways. As a result of all the upheaval, many people are reassessing their priorities and thinking about early retirement.

According to Pew Research, 28 million baby boomers retired in 2020 and a recent study found 39 percent plan to retire by 65, while 18 percent said they plan to retire by age 59.

Before taking that step, here are four questions to ask yourself.

1. Can I afford to stop working? Look at your retirement savings, your life expectancy, your projected income and annual expenditures in retirement. You’ll want to consider unforeseen circumstances down the line that could be costly, such as the need to reside in a nursing home.

Use a free retirement calculator and resources available online to help you make a realistic determination as to whether you can afford to retire now, or whether you need to keep earning your full-time salary for a few more years.

2. Do I need life insurance after retirement? There is no one-size-fits-all answer here. However, those carrying debt into retirement, such as mortgages and personal loans, should consider a life insurance plan.

Today, many baby boomers are financially supporting children and grandchildren and have significant debt. According to the National Council on Aging, the median consumer debt for households headed by someone aged 65 or older is 4.5 times higher now than in 1989.

Paying off a mortgage is one of the most common reasons to purchase a life insurance policy. Doing so can help ensure your family is able to enjoy the home they love without the burden of outstanding payments.

“You would do anything to ensure your family has a bright future and having insurance is a simple and affordable way to protect them,” said Louis Colaizzo, senior vice president of Erie Family Life. “Life insurance can help loved ones maintain the standard of living they are accustomed to.”

So, how much would you need to leave behind? Calculate your needs with the life insurance calculator available at erieinsurance.com/life-insurance or contact an independent Erie Insurance agent to discuss options.

3. How will I get health insurance? The current Medicare eligibility age for most people is 65, so if you plan retire before then, you’ll need to find another way to get health insurance. Even after you’re covered by Medicare, health care expenses can add up, especially if you’re on a fixed retirement income.

Some insurance companies offer Medicare supplemental insurance to help pay the portion of expenses not covered by Medicare.

4. How will I spend my time? Retirement can come with ample newfound free time you may not be accustomed to. While that can sound amazing to those working full-time, the transition can be jarring. Whether it’s volunteering, taking up new creative hobbies or traveling, planning now for how you will spend your time is a good idea to stave off boredom.

As you consider when to stop working, first ask yourself these four questions so you can take the appropriate steps to help ensure your retirement reality matches your retirement dreams.

Dive Oyster House Opens in Briarcliff

Tired of emptying your wallet at expensive restaurants? Dive Oyster, which opened recently in Briarcliff Manor, is one of the spots that could be your new favorite. As I pulled up, I was surprised to see Kenny Neziraj tending to the front of the house, aligning the patio tables on the sidewalk.

The last time I saw Kenny, he was affiliated with the original opening team at the popular Kee Oyster House in White Plains. His family-owned business happens to own Fratelli’s Trattoria in Croton-On-Hudson, in this new restaurant.

As host, Neziraj is quite the conversationalist, so I took a seat at the artsy seashell bar and sipped on my Captain Lawrence IPA as we spoke. He opened Dive two months ago in the same space that had previously been Chatterbox 54.

The renovation is a work in progress, but Kenny was anxious to show off the unique touches he has added throughout the dining room, from the banquette seating to the lighting fixtures. The working kitchen looked spotless.

The menu specializes in fish and seafood as the name implies, but also offers enough meat, poultry and pasta options to satisfy all comers. I had to start with a half-dozen regional oysters, the chef’s choice, and they came out on a nice platter with all the trimmings. There were three delicious house-made cocktail sauces, including horseradish. Dipped into the ice was a miniature bottle of hot sauce waiting to be opened, for those so inclined.

Oysters are always a pleasant indulgence. For my main course, Neziraj suggested their version of chicken martini – parmesan crusted chicken cutlets topped with breadcrumbs and sauteed in lemon and white wine. They sat on top of a bed of buttery fresh vegetables. Dishes are generously served here, and I did take half home. It was a flavorful experience. Will be back.

Dive Oyster House is located at 1201 Pleasantville Rd. in Briarcliff Manor. Open for lunch and dinner seven days a week

Menu Movers & Shakers

As always, say’s nothing like a good old tavern for hearty food, drink and conversation. The Cobble Stone on Anderson Hill Road in Purchase may be a record holder. It is one of the oldest eateries in Westchester.

According to brothers Scott and Craig Sala, fourth-generation proprietors, the restaurant and bar has continuously operated under the Sala family since 1917. While the official signage out front says Est. 1933, Sala explained that has to do with the repeal of Prohibition. The Cobble Stone served its public right through that period, sometimes as a speakeasy.

Well, the history is intriguing. Many of the old fixtures are there: the green vinyl wooden booths, cobblestone walls, stained glass windows, even an old jukebox and cigarette machine sit idle in the bar and lounge.

The restaurant is located amidst vast estates, country clubs and corporate parks and within range of Manhattanville College and SUNY Purchase.

Leave it to Tom, the friendly barkeep, to refill your favorite brew while scanning the menu. Many of your old favorites are here. On this late afternoon I opted for the gorgonzola bacon burger served on a Kaiser roll with a side of steak fries, while my companion went for the chicken chopped Cobb salad, bed of mixed greens topped with avocado, tomato, bacon, hard-boiled egg, red onion and cucumber served with choice of dressing. Both were ample and quite good.

For dessert, the house-made New York-style cheesecake with caramel sauce and whipped cream satiated our sweet tooth. We shared throughout our meal. Might try their beer can chicken on my next visit.

What better place to dive into a platter of oysters than at an oyster house – in this case Dive Oyster House, which opened recently in Briarcliff Manor.

The Cobble Stone is located at 29 Anderson Hill Rd. in Purchase. Open seven days a week, Monday through Friday from 3 to 9 p.m. and 12 to 9 p.m. on weekends.

Harvest Moon Farm and Orchard

130 Hardscrabble Rd., North Salem. Operated by first-generation farmers since 2011, the farm store is open daily 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. The on-site kitchen is open Monday through Friday. Get tickets online for apple picking. CSA membership available. Info: 914-485-1210 or visit www.harvestmoonfarmandorchard.com.

The Beautiful Struggle: How to Cope After Losing a Beloved Pet

By Brandon Wainwright

As any pet parent will tell you, the joy, love and comfort that comes with adopting an animal companion is a blessing rivalled by few experiences life has to offer.

What they’ll also tell you is that losing an animal companion can be more emotionally devastating than just about any of life’s many adversities. After experiencing such loss, it takes some pet lovers many years, if ever, before they are willing to open their hearts up to another fur (or feather) baby.

For though they know they will be signing up for much joy, they also know they will be signing up for much pain. This is the unavoidable reality of owning a pet.

I’ve always been a dog lover, but our beloved chiuhua/dachshund mix, Tyson, was my soulmate. He had a richness of spirit that could best be described as “old soul.” He loved with a warm depth that was somehow wise, tough and vulnerable all at once. Losing Tyson in April 2018 was one of the most emotionally painful experiences of my life, but it was also one of incredible spiritual growth.

In my search for healing, I’ve discovered a few things along my path that I would like to pass along to anybody who is grieving over a dearly departed pet.

1. Don’t buy into the mistaken idea that intense grieving over a pet is weird or inappropriate. Our relationships with our animal friends, though different from those with our human friends, are nonetheless very significant and impactful. Sometimes even more so. The love we feel for another being is not determined by species, but rather by how our souls mesh. We must be gentle with ourselves and understand that our grief reflects our love – and there is nothing weird or inappropriate about that.

2. Don’t adopt another animal during your grieving process. For many, the natural compulsion when we are coping with the loss of a fur baby is to try and alleviate the pain by adopting another pet. The problem is, it is impossible to replace that magic with another pet. This isn’t dissimilar to the let-down that inevitably comes from a “rebound relationship” after a breakup. The new pet simply can’t live up to our expectations, and we end up feeling dissatisfied. Worse, our healthy healing process is often hindered. This is unfair to both the pet and to us.

Instead, spend time with a friend’s pet. Perhaps offer pet-sitting services, or even foster a pet awaiting their forever home. This way, we can offer and receive love and companionship from a pet while allowing ourselves to heal without setting a pet up for failure. When we are truly ready for a new fur baby, we will know it.

3. Don’t minimize the significance of your healing process, but rather open your mind, heart and spirit to new experiences. For example, Reiki, which is a Japanese form of spiritual energy, offers amazing healing from not only physical ailments, but also mental, emotional and spiritual difficulties. I discovered Reiki during my grieving process. I have since become a Reiki master and animal Reiki practitioner. It has definitely changed my life for the better.

4. Realize that though your pet has crossed the rainbow bridge, their soul is still very much alive and connected to you. Consider sitting quietly and, in your mind and heart, simply reach out to them. You’ll likely be very comfortable by the beautiful love and peace you receive in return.

You might also consider utilizing the services of an animal communicator to deliver messages to, and receive messages from, your pet. For some, this may sound far-fetched, but believe me when I say that animal communication is very real. It has the potential to facilitate great healing.

5. With the intense loss we feel when a beloved pet transitions, it can feel like a tragedy. The “tragedy” is only one of perspective. Rejoice knowing that you loved your pet and helped them learn their life lessons – and they did the same for you. Find comfort and peace knowing that you provided them with love and friendship in a way that only you could – and they absolutely did the same for you. This makes their lives a wonderful success and anything but tragic.

Our pets are more than just our friends, companions and protectors. They provide friendship, companionship, love and protection with an innocent joy and dedication that is both pure and unconditional. All they want in return is love. We, their human companions, naturally reciprocate this pure, innocent love and dedication.

Our pets bring out the very best in us. They help us tap into our highest spirits because they make it safe to love with a vulnerability that is rare in most human relationships. The struggle is worth it!

Harckham Leads Ramble Hike in Peekskill Park

State Sen. Peter Harckham led a mile-long hike in Fort Hill Park on Sunday as part of the official events connected to the 21st annual Hudson River Valley Ramble, a walk, hike, paddle and bike tour celebration of the natural beauty and historical treasures of the Hudson Valley.

Over a dozen people joined Harckham for the early morning hike, including William C. Janevay, executive director of the Adirondack Council and one of the architects of the Ramble while he was serving as the longtime regional director of the state Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC) in the Hudson Valley/Catskill Region.

“The Hudson River Valley Ramble is a yearly reminder of just how incredible this part of the world is,” said Harckham. “The COVID-19 pandemic kept many of us sheltered and indoors last year, and this hike is proof of how important the Great Outdoors is to our physical and mental needs as humans.”

Harckham noted that Fort Hill Park, with its historical importance connected to the Revolutionary War, is “Peekskill’s hidden gem,” located a few blocks away from the city’s downtown area and home to different rock formations, Colonial-era stone walls and a protected woodland, str all open to the public.

“The senator has been a strong friend of conservation and the Adirondack Park and we look forward to making progress for forests, climate, water quality, wildlife and communities in the upcoming session,” Janevay said.

In 2019, Harckham was able to deliver a $221,000 state infrastructure grant to the City of Peekskill for Fort Hill Park, which helped expand and improve the park’s trail network.

Bedford Audubon Appoints New Executive Director

The Bedford Audubon Society Board of Directors announced Monday the appointment of Bill Cavers as the organization’s executive director.

Bedford Audubon is one of the oldest Audubon chapters in the nation and serves communities in northern Westchester and eastern Putnam counties.

“We’re thrilled that Bill is taking on this leadership role,” said Susan Fisher, the board president. “Authentic and engaging with real substance, Bill fits right in with the Bedford Audubon family. His proven leadership and fundraising skills, business background and passion for protecting the environment make him well positioned to deliver on the board’s vision and lead us to the next level of growth.”

Cavers comes to Bedford Audubon from Conservation Law Foundation (CLF) where he has been a senior fellow for the last 16 months. He serves on the Long Island Sound Study, CLF’s Connecticut state advisory board and is also a longstanding member of the Town of Darien, Conn.’s Coastal Commission.

Cavers retired in 2017 from a 30-year career financing large-scale solar, wind and other clean energy projects and ventures.

“It’s a privilege to be joining Bedford Audubon,” Cavers said. “More than ever, it’s a time to engage with birds and nature, and I’m thrilled to undertake that mission in the communities surrounding Bylane Farm.”

He completed a nonprofit management program at the University of Connecticut to transition his business skills. Cavers has an undergraduate degree in political science from Johns Hopkins University and an MBA from the University of Michigan.

He and his wife, Laura, live in Darien. Their two children live in Boston and New York City.
Arc Stages Strives for ‘The Mountaintop’ in Return Production

By Martin Wilbur

This Friday evening Arc Stages returns from its pandemic-induced performance hiatus, and the production promises to provide three weekends of riveting subject matter.

The Pleasantville-based theater company is presenting “The Mountaintop,” playwright Katori Hall’s fictionalized yet thought-provoking work on the last night of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.’s life.

The entire two-character play takes place in his room at the Lorraine Motel in Memphis on the evening of Apr. 3, 1968, the day before his assassination and following his eerily prescient final public address, which has come to be known as “I’ve Been to the Mountaintop.”

Director Ryan Quinn said the goal of the play, featuring actor Gabriel Lawrence as King and Shavonna Banks as Carrie Mae, a maid who delivers him room service late that evening, isn’t an impersonation but to give greater context to the life and work of the civil rights icon.

Quinn said that Hall has told the story that in her grandmother’s house there were only two photos – of Jesus and King – and one of the playwright’s missions was to take King off the wall and explore the man, not the myth, and where the civil rights movement was headed if history had not intervened.

“It’s pretend, so the goal, again, isn’t an impersonation, the goal is a conversation with an icon of what it is of the person that we bring in to what it is we get to see, and I think you’ll see right away, because the playwright does four things immediately to make us understand him as a man and not as a saint,” Quinn explained.

Hall, a Memphis native who wrote “The Mountaintop” in 2009, has related the story that her mother wanted to go see King speak in his final trip to the city, but that her mother, Hall’s maternal grandmother, refused to let her attend fearing it was too dangerous, according to Quinn. She has woven that into the story as well, he said.

Quinn also said the play continues an important conversation about the civil rights struggle that King was grappling with at the time of his death more than 50 years ago.

“I think we’ve sanitized history, and the vision is beautiful, but he talks so much about complacency, and especially white complacency within the movement, especially where we were at in ’68 after the Civil Rights bill has passed, and we never hear about that,” Quinn said. “But that was really happening at that moment and I think we’re still reconciling about what that presents.”

He hopes that if theater-goers take away anything from the show, it is to challenge everyone about doing the difficult work of achieving greater equality.

Arc Stages Artistic Director Adam Cohen said when he read “The Mountaintop” it was a moving experience for him even before he and Quinn began with auditions. That’s something that often doesn’t happen often, even with outstanding works, until it’s brought to the stage, he said.

“This one hit me on the page,” Cohen said. “I was devastated reading it and laughing and crying, like the person on the page spoke to me so much that I have to do this show.”

After theaters were closed since early 2020 because of COVID-19, it also helps financially that there are only two actors, Cohen said, even though Arc Stages had been able to continue with its Education Stage programs and productions for youngsters.

Moreover, Lawrence and Banks are truthful actors, intensely believable in their roles, he said.

The show runs for seven performances on Friday and Saturday evenings, Oct. 1, 2, 8, 9, 15 and 16 with a 2 p.m. matinee on Sunday, Oct. 17. All evening performances begin at 8 p.m.

Tickets are $38 for adults, $30 for students and $28 for students. For tickets and more information, visit www.arcstages.org. All patrons must be vaccinated except for children under 12 and those with medical exemptions.
